2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Agreement for Payment of Costs of Subdivision Telephone Facilities Containing Contingent Service Refund Not Considered Loan Requiring Payment of Interest — Judgment on Pleadings Affirmed: In 2001, defendant telephone cooperative entered an aid to construction contract whereby plaintiff agreed to pay $85,497.88 to aid defendant in costs incurred in installing, operating, and maintaining telephone facilities for services to plaintiff's subdivision. The contract required defendant to refund all or part of the money following construction if the actual cost per unit was less than estimated and the unit maintained continuous service for 5 years. In 2004, plaintiff demanded that defendant pay interest on the money, asserting that the money was a loan. The District Court held that the money was not a loan, so plaintiff was not entitled to interest. The District Court granted judgment on the pleadings for defendant pursuant to former Rule 12(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court properly considered all materials and exhibits referred to in the pleading, and the court did not have to accept the allegation that the money was a loan for purposes of granting judgment because the question was not a factual allegation, but rather a question of law. Defendant's obligation to return money was based on a contingency, and there was no absolute promise to repay, so the transaction did not meet the definition of a loan. Thus, judgment on the pleadings was proper. Firelight Meadows, LLC v. 3 Rivers Tel. Co-op, Inc., 2008 MT 202, 344 M 117, 186 P3d 869 (2008), following Rae v. Cameron, 112 M 159, 114 P2d 1060 (1941). See also Nyquist v. Nyquist, 255 M 149, 841 P2d 515 (1992).

Sale With Option to Repurchase Not Considered Loan — Factors Not Met: Dillree initially requested a loan from Devoe, but Devoe stated he did not make loans and the request was denied. Dillree then suggested he could sell Devoe certain property with an option to repurchase within 6 months. Two such transactions occurred, but the obligations were not timely repaid and Devoe demanded surrender of the property. District Court awarded the property to Devoe, but on appeal Dillree contended the transactions were not sales, pointing out the four factors listed in Murray v. Butte-Monitor Tunnel Mining Co., 41 M 449, 110 P 497 (1910), which tend to confirm that a transaction is a security arrangement or mortgage and not a sale. The factors are: (1) the transaction in its inception had for its purpose a loan, not a sale; (2) the grantor was in financial distress at the time of the transaction; (3) the price appears to have been grossly inadequate; and (4) according to the grantee's own theory, the transaction did not amount to an absolute sale but to a conditional sale. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's findings that factors (1) and (3) were not present and that therefore the transactions could not be considered loans but were contracts for sale of property with the opportunity for repurchase. Dillree v. Devoe, 223 M 47, 724 P2d 171, 43 St. Rep. 1521 (1986). See also Campbell v. Campbell, 223 M 124, 725 P2d 207, 43 St. Rep. 1584 (1986).

Transaction Based on Contingency: A loan of money is a temporary letting for a temporary use, the term implying an obligation to repay. If such obligation is based on a contingency or a condition, the transaction is not a loan. One of several joint adventurers agreed to furnish the money for testing land for deposits of placer gold, he to be repaid if the venture should prove successful. The transaction did not constitute a loan, as contended in an action to recover wage claims, but rather was an investment. Rae v. Cameron, 112 M 159, 114 P2d 1060 (1941), followed in Nyquist v. Nyquist, 255 M 149, 841 P2d 515, 49 St. Rep. 927 (1992).

31-1-103. Loan presumed to be on interest.

Case Notes

Accounting of Guardian: A guardian, without an order of the court, loaned the funds of his ward on an interest-bearing note. At the final accounting of the guardian, the ward refused to accept the note. In his final report the guardian treated the total sum of the note as cash, charged himself with that amount as included in the total receipts, and made no mention of the note or the interest. The guardian was properly directed to account for the interest due on the note at the date of final settlement, even though the ward refused to accept the note in lieu of cash. In re Allard Guardianship, 49 M 219, 141 P 661 (1914).

2005 Amendment: Chapter 125 at end inserted "and includes loan origination fees, points, and prepaid finance charges, as defined in 12 CFR 226.2". Amendment effective March 24, 2005.

Retroactive Applicability — Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 125, L. 2005, provided: "[This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to loans subject to [this act] made on or after October 1, 1985, the effective date of Chapter 406, L. 1985."

Section 8, Ch. 272, L. 2005, amended sec. 5, Ch. 125, L. 2005, to provide: "(1) Except as provided in subsection (2), [~~This~~ this act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to loans subject to [this act] made on or after October 1, 1985, the effective date of Chapter 406, Laws of 1985.

(2) [This act] does not apply to loans that are the subject of a lawsuit filed prior to [the effective date of this act]." Chapter 125 effective March 24, 2005. Chapter 272 effective April 19, 2005.

Case Notes

No Duty of Insurer to Cover City's Conversion of Pension Funds: The city of Dillon failed to properly pay pension benefits, even though the city received the money from the state. When a beneficiary sued the city to recover unpaid benefits, the city tendered defense of its claim to its insurer, but the insurer declined to provide coverage or defend the claim based on a financial gain exclusion in the insurance policy. The beneficiary was granted summary judgment, so the city paid the judgment and filed an action to recover against the insurer. The District Court held that the insurer was liable and breached its duty to defend, so the insurer appealed. The Supreme Court held that the insurer had no duty to provide coverage to the city because the city's claim arose in whole or in part from the city's unlawful retention and conversion of the pension funds, so the city had no coverage for the claims for return of principal and interest. The District Court was reversed. Dillon v. Mont. Municipal Ins. Authority, 2009 MT 393, 353 M 370, 220 P3d 623 (2009).

Points Charged as Flat Fee on Loans Not Considered Interest — Charging Unauthorized Fees Violative of Consumer Loan Act: A lender charged a loan fee, called points, upon the origination of real estate-secured loans. The lender contended that the points were considered interest on the loan and were thus permissible under the Montana Consumer Loan Act (CLA). The Supreme Court disagreed. Interest is generally defined as a charge made for the use, forbearance, or detention of money. A flat fee front-loaded into a loan, computed as a percentage of the loan but bearing no direct relation to actual costs of specific services performed and which did not constitute a charge for use of the lender's money over time, is not interest, but rather is a fee charged by the lender for making the loan. Such fees are not authorized by the CLA and are thus prohibited. To protect borrowers, the court declined to interpret the CLA in a way that contains a loophole whereby predatory lenders could add points onto the beginning of an interest-bearing loan and thereby escape the requirement that the points be at least partially refunded if the loan is prepaid or refinanced. (See 2005 amendment.) Wombold v. Associates Financial Serv. Co. of Mont., Inc., 2004 MT 397, 325 M 290, 104 P3d 1080 (2004).

Applicability of Usury to Postdefault Interest: Montana usury statutes apply to detentions of money as well as loans and forebearances. The statutory definition of interest in this section includes postdefault interest. Therefore, the District Court correctly applied the usury penalty in a case in which a lender sought to charge 18% interest in the event of default on a loan. Scarr v. Boyer, 250 M 248, 818 P2d 381, 48 St. Rep. 910 (1991).

Retail Installment Sales: The finance charges provided for in the Montana Retail Installment Sales Act are not compensation for the forbearance of money within the statutory definition of interest in this section. At the time of purchase, the debt created is a time obligation and is not then due because of the express provisions of the revolving charge account agreement which allows the customer to pay for the purchases in installments over a period of time. The "time price" doctrine applies to revolving charge account sales even though they are governed by the terms of one price agreement covering all future purchases from time to time rather than a series of identical individual agreements entered into at the time of each individual sale. Cecil v. Allied Stores Corp., 162 M 491, 513 P2d 704 (1973).

Payments on Insurance: When, after maturity of endowment insurance contract, insured exercised option to permit the insurer to hold the proceeds to be payable on death and to pay monthly interest, the payment of such yearly amounts was interest and not an annuity. In re Harper's Estate, 124 M 52, 218 P2d 927 (1950).

Administrator's Use of Estate Funds: A special administrator permitted estate funds to remain in an open checking account for 9 years. The account was at a bank at which he owned all but 14% of the capital stock. He was nevertheless not chargeable with interest upon the theory that by mingling the funds with those of the bank and using them he unlawfully profited by their use. In re Williams' Estate, 55 M 63, 173 P 790 (1918).

Interest — Incident to Debt: Interest is merely an incident to a debt, to be paid from time to time or at the date when the principal falls due, in consideration of the forbearance extended to the debtor, and becomes a part of the debt, or a debt at all, only when it has been earned. Carlson v. Helena, 39 M 82, 102 P 39 (1909).

31-1-105. Annual rate.

Case Notes

No Time Expressed in Note: Where no time is expressed in a note, the note is calculated on an annual basis. An allegation that the interest is due on a note and an action for the interest is sufficient to apprise the defendant of the claim against him. Mercer v. Mercer, 120 M 132, 180 P2d 248 (1947).

31-1-106. Legal interest.

Compiler's Comments

2013 Amendment: Chapter 278 in (1) after "31-1-112" deleted "or 31-1-817"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective December 31, 2013.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 455 in (1) at end of exception clause inserted "31-1-817"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Applicability: Section 23, Ch. 455, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] applies to title loan agreements entered into or renewed after January 1, 2002."

1985 Amendment: In (1) increased interest rate from 6% to 10%.

1983 Amendment: Made 1981 amendment permanent. (Amendment was to terminate July 1, 1983—sec. 8, Ch. 275, L. 1981.)

1981 Amendment: Inserted "or 31-1-111 and 31-1-112" following "Uniform Commercial Code" near the beginning of (1).

Case Notes

Fair Debt Collection Practices Act — Claimant Not Required to Dispute Debt Within 30 Days — Debt Not Misrepresented: The plaintiff sued the defendants alleging violations of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA). The lawsuit concerned the defendants' attempt to collect a dental bill, which the plaintiff did not dispute with the defendants within 30 days. The District Court granted summary judgment for the defendants, holding that the plaintiff did not dispute her debt within 30 days and this barred her FDCPA claims. The Supreme Court disagreed with the District Court's reasoning that the FDCPA requires a claimant to dispute the debt within 30 days. However, the Supreme Court found that the District Court's grant of summary judgment was appropriate because the defendants did not misrepresent the debt and were entitled to charge fees in the collection of the debt. Serrania v. LPH, Inc., 2015 MT 113, 379 Mont. 17, 347 P.3d 1237.

No Prejudgment Interest in Action Against State: The District Court held that 31-1-106 requires the state to pay prejudgment interest on any money collected by the Department of Public Health and Human Services in excess of federal Medicaid law. The Supreme Court reversed, concluding that 2-9-317 is unambiguous and allows no interest to be assessed against the state until 2 years after the date of entry of judgment. Blanton v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2011 MT 110, 360 Mont. 396, 255 P.3d 1229.

Premarital Agreement — Allocation of 40% Ownership Interest in Brokerage Service Company Upheld: A wife argued that the District Court erred in allocating a 40% ownership interest in a brokerage service company to her husband. The Supreme Court held that the transfer was enforceable under 30-18-106 even though the wife had provided $280,000, which was transferred to the husband's separate checking account without an acknowledgment before a notary public. The $280,000 was a loan from the wife that was repaid in full. The $20,000 used to purchase the initial interest was a gift since no repayment schedule was ever executed and no consideration was requested. In addition, under 28-3-206, uncertainty is to be resolved against the party who caused the uncertainty to exist. With respect to the loan, the Supreme Court remanded after applying 31-1-106 and holding that the wife's loan of $280,000 was not interest-free. In re Marriage of Weiss, 2010 MT 188, 357 Mont. 320, 239 P.3d 123. In Weiss v. Weiss, 2011 MT 240, 362 Mont. 157, 261 P.3d 1034, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court correctly determined on remand that the $280,000 loan was paid off in full by the husband and that the District Court's calculation of simple interest on the loan was correct.

Simple Interest Payable Absent Agreement for Payment of Compound Interest: The District Court ordered one partner to pay simple interest on the amount owed to a partnership for the purchase of a partnership interest. The other partner contended that compound interest rather than simple interest should be paid because the amount owed was analogous to the debt on a loan that required payment of compound interest. The Supreme Court noted that under 31-1-109, parties may agree in writing to the payment of compound interest, but absent an agreement in writing, Montana law does not provide for compound interest, so the District Court did not err in requiring payment of simple interest on the deficit capital account. McCormick v. Brevig, 2007 MT 195, 338 M 370, 169 P3d 352 (2007).

Preamendment Interest at Six Percent — Postamendment Interest at Ten Percent: Where prejudgment interest was payable from June 1983 through December 1987, the rate was properly set at 6% through October 1, 1985, the date of amendment of this section, and 10% thereafter. Albers v. Bar ZF Ranch, Inc., 229 M 396, 747 P2d 1347, 44 St. Rep. 2081 (1987).

Prejudgment Interest Rate Applicable From Effective Date of Amendment: The amendment increasing the legal interest rate became effective October 1, 1985. The interest rate for periods prior to that date is 6% a year and 10% a year thereafter. Springer v. Opsahl, 229 M 10, 744 P2d 884, 44 St. Rep. 1738 (1987).

Interest Due on Commission Fees: On appeal of a judgment awarding commission fees as detailed in a signed note but specifically denying award of interest on the debt, the Supreme Court found that the criteria to be eligible for prejudgment interest were met, that under 27-1-312 the remedy for breach of an obligation to pay money is "the terms of the obligation with interest thereon", and that the appropriate interest to be charged was ascertainable under this statute. Byrne v. Terry, 228 M 387, 741 P2d 1341, 44 St. Rep. 1620 (1987).

Interest on Judgment Not Compound Interest: In its initial summary judgment order, the District Court awarded a real estate broker the commission due plus interest at 6% on that amount from date of breach to date of judgment, pursuant to 27-1-211. On a second summary judgment dismissing a counterclaim, the court found the broker entitled to judgment at 10% on the initial judgment. The Supreme Court found this award was not compound interest in violation of 25-9-205, but was interest on the judgment, a correct calculation of interest due. Ellingson Agency, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 228 M 360, 742 P2d 1009, 44 St. Rep. 1598 (1987).

No Prejudgment Interest on Payments Made by Buyer but Later Ruled Responsibility of Sellers: Sellers reassumed possession of their former business after buyer defaulted on the sales contract. A dispute between buyer and sellers over who was responsible for the payment of accounts payable incurred by buyer was eventually resolved by the District Court in favor of buyer. Buyer then claimed he was entitled to prejudgment interest on the payments he had made after default. He was not entitled to interest under 27-1-211 because the award to buyer was one of reimbursement, not damages, nor was buyer entitled to interest under 27-1-212 because the money paid by buyer after default does not represent a breach of any obligation on the part of sellers. The District Court properly held that 31-1-106 applied. Heine v. Seibert, 217 M 224, 703 P2d 865, 42 St. Rep. 1152 (1985).

Breach of Oral Contract — Interest Rate: Plaintiff agreed to remodel a prefab home for defendant. He also built a foundation, added a bedroom and deck, and built a double garage. Plaintiff completed the basement and sent a bill to defendant. The bill was paid. The remainder of the work was completed, but defendant refused to pay, contending the oral agreement between the parties contained a "cap" of $30,000. Plaintiff contended the agreement was on a cost-plus basis, the unpaid portion of which was $63,310. The District Court found for plaintiff and awarded the amount due with interest at 6% (prior to 1985 amendment to this section) from the completion date. Defendant contended the award of damages was unreasonable. The amount awarded was the amount owed on the contract, not damages for breach. The award merely compensated plaintiff for what he was owed. Pursuant to 27-1-211, plaintiff was entitled to interest from the date he was entitled to payment. That was the date the District Court determined the work was completed. Since the parties had not agreed on an interest rate, the District Court used the legal rate stated in 31-1-106. This was within the court's reasonable discretion. Frank L. Pirtz Constr., Inc. v. Hardin Town Pump, Inc., 214 M 131, 692 P2d 460, 41 St. Rep. 2366 (1984).

Interest and Expenses Allowable: Plaintiff entered a buy-sell to purchase defendants' ranch. One of his major considerations was gaining investment tax credits. Defendants refused to perform, and plaintiff filed a breach of contract action. The District Court found for plaintiff and awarded him prejudgment interest at 10% on his state and federal income tax obligation, the earnest money, and his capital expenditures on the ranch. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that interest on the earnest money was all that should be allowed as prejudgment interest under 27-1-211. Prejudgment interest should be 6% under 31-1-106 (prior to 1985 amendment). Interest should then be allowed on the judgment according to 27-1-211 at the amount of 10% under 25-9-205. The expenses that are allowable to a plaintiff are found in 25-10-201, and 25-10-101 outlines when costs are allowed. The cost of depositions not used during trial is not allowed. Various travel expenditures would not have been chargeable to defendants if the contract had been performed. The portion of capital expenditures allowed should be only the loss plaintiff suffered as a result of expenditures from the time of signing the buy-sell to the time of breach. Ehly v. Cady, 212 M 82, 687 P2d 687, 41 St. Rep. 1611 (1984).

No Default for Failure to Pay Interest on Royalty Payment — Mineral Lease Not Requiring Payment of Interest: Where the plaintiff lessors of mineral rights gave the defendant lessees notice of default for failure to make a rental payment and the lessees tendered a check for that payment, the District Court did not err in granting summary judgment for the defendants in a later action for default brought by the plaintiffs. Even assuming that payment of interest in the royalty was due under 31-1-106, the agreement of the parties did not require payment of interest. Failure to remit interest was not in default of that agreement. Moreover, the default notice failed to notify the defendants that interest was due, contrary to the default clause of the parties' agreement. Failure to pay the interest was therefore immaterial. Lewis v. St., 207 M 361, 675 P2d 107, 41 St. Rep. 9 (1984).

Interest for Judgment on Account Stated: Trial court was in error awarding 10% interest per annum on judgment (prior to 1985 amendment to this section). Big Sky Livestock v. Herzog, 171 M 409, 558 P2d 1107 (1976).

Judgment to Include Interest:

In an action for breach of contract, the buyer had made a down payment and, contrary to the court's instructions, the jury's verdict made no mention of recovery of the down payment. It was competent for the court to correct the verdict by including recovery of the advance payment with interest. Gilmore v. Mulvihill, 109 M 601, 98 P2d 335 (1940).

The court may add the interest to the judgment when there is no controversy on the facts giving rise to the right to interest. W. J. Lake & Co. v. Mont. Horse Prod. Co., 109 M 434, 97 P2d 590 (1939).

Demand for Payment:

When a debtor knows amount due and due date, no demand is necessary to start the running of interest from the date the payment should have been made. W. J. Lake & Co. v. Mont. Horse Prod. Co., 109 M 434, 97 P2d 590 (1939).

The holder of past due interest coupons bearing interest on county bonds is not required to first file a claim with the county for such interest, the amount of the demand being fixed by law. Kalman v. Treasure County, 84 M 285, 275 P 743 (1929).

Probate Proceedings: When an administrator, though ordered by the court to sell for cash, sold on credit and without security after unnecessary delay, he is chargeable with interest from the date money should have been received. In re Astibia's Estate, 100 M 224, 46 P2d 712 (1935).

Administering Estate: Interest is not allowable on the charges and expenses of administering an estate. In re Bielenberg's Estate, 98 M 546, 40 P2d 49 (1935).

Ascertained Amount Due:

When a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) claimant overstated the amount of his claim in the lien filed, so that it required the judgment of the court to foreclose the lien and to decide the correct amount due, interest—a creature of statute—was allowable only from the date of the decision. Eskestrand v. Wunder, 94 M 57, 20 P2d 622 (1933).

This section, insofar as it relates to accounts, applies when the amount due the creditor is determined—when a balance is ascertained. From such time a certain amount of money is due the creditor. Hefferlin v. Karlman, 29 M 139, 74 P 201 (1903).

Insolvency Proceedings: In an action by a creditor against the receiver of an insolvent bank, the creditor, on establishing his preferred claim, is entitled to interest thereon from the date of the closing of the bank. McDonald v. Am. Bank Co., 79 M 233, 255 P 733 (1927).

Unspecified Rate of Interest: A promissory note payable with interest without specifying the rate thereof carries interest at the legal rate. In the absence of fraud or mistake, a written contract supersedes all prior oral negotiations and agreements with relation thereto. Burnett v. Burnett, 68 M 546, 219 P 831 (1923).

Accounting of Executor: An executor retained in his hands funds of the estate which should have been deposited in a bank, drawing interest. The executor, in an equitable accounting, should not be required to pay arbitrary rates of interest upon such funds in excess of the statutory rate, particularly where he accounted for a higher rate than the banks would have paid. In re Ricker's Estate, 14 M 153, 35 P 960 (1894).

31-1-107. Interest rate allowed by agreement.

Compiler's Comments

2011 Amendment: Chapter 108 in (1) after "above the prime rate" substituted "published by the federal reserve system in its statistical release H.15 Selected Interest Rates for bank prime loans" for "of major New York banks, as published in the Wall Street Journal edition"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 1, 2011.

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 4, Ch. 108, L. 2011, provided: "[This act] is effective on passage and approval [approved April 1, 2011] and applies to all interest rate agreements governed by 7-8-2304, 31-1-107, or 33-3-431 made on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective April 1, 2011.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 588 in (1), near beginning after "interest", substituted "that does not exceed the greater of 15% or an amount that is" for "not more than"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 29, 1993.

1983 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 9 made 1981 amendment permanent. (Amendment was to terminate July 1, 1983—sec. 8, Ch. 275, L. 1981.)

Chapter 567 substituted (1) allowing the parties to agree in writing to an interest rate not more than 6% above the prime rate for former text, which read: "(1) On amounts up to $150,000, parties may agree in writing for the payment of any rate of interest not more than 10% per annum or more than 4 percentage points in excess of the discount rate on 90-day commercial paper in effect at the federal reserve bank in the ninth federal reserve district, whichever is greater, and such interest shall be allowed according to the terms of the agreement.

(2) On amounts exceeding $150,000 and up to $300,000, parties may agree in writing for the payment of any rate of interest not more than 10% per annum or more than 5 percentage points in excess of the discount rate on 90-day commercial paper in effect at the federal reserve bank in the ninth federal reserve district, whichever is greater, and such interest shall be allowed according to the terms of the agreement.

(3) On amounts exceeding $300,000, parties may agree in writing to the payment of any rate of interest, without limitation, and such interest shall be allowed according to the terms of the agreement."; and inserted (2) providing that a loan that is not usurious when made is lawful for the duration of the loan provided it is not substantially changed (the subsection does not apply to loan renewals).

The amendments made by Ch. 567 were made to the version of 31-1-107, which was to be revived July 1, 1983. Chapter 9 made the temporary version of 31-1-107 permanent and was effective February 3, 1983. The Code Commissioner has added subsection (3), which was the amendment made permanent by Ch. 9, to the version of 31-1-107 as amended by Ch. 567.

1981 Amendment: Inserted (4) providing that the section does not apply to regulated lenders.

Prime Rate Determination: The prime rate as published in the Wall Street Journal referred to in this section may be found under the "Money Rates" heading in the Wall Street Journal.

Case Notes

Contractually Agreed Interest Rate Not Considered Usurious: A construction contract set out that 1.5% a month interest would be owed on everything unpaid after 30 days. Defendant did not challenge the interest rate and signed the contract. However, during construction lien proceedings, defendant cited this section and asserted that the interest rate was usurious. The District Court awarded prejudgment interest at the contract rate, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The usury rate in this section refers to loans of money, not construction liens. Defendant agreed to the rate and the District Court did not err in applying it. Johnston v. Palmer, 2007 MT 99, 337 M 101, 158 P3d 998 (2007).

Calculation of Usury Penalty Using Maturity Date of Note Rather Than Trial Date Affirmed: Plaintiff foreclosed on a loan to defendant. Defendant contended that the loan terms contained a usurious interest rate. The District Court agreed and calculated a usury penalty against plaintiff using the date that the note was executed until the maturity date of the loan. Defendant argued that the rate should instead have been imposed through the date of the trial. On appeal, the Supreme Court found no precedent to support defendant's position. As in Rustics of Lindbergh Lake, Inc. v. Lease, 213 M 246, 690 P2d 440 (1984), the District Court was faced with a term loan with a specific maturity date, and had the usury penalty been calculated through the date of the trial, plaintiff would have owed defendant a substantial amount of money, which would have been clearly inequitable given that: (1) defendant borrowed money but never made a payment; (2) the loan carried a legal interest rate for current debt and it was only the default rate that was usurious; and (3) when plaintiff discovered the usurious default interest rate, the loan was retroactively recalculated to eliminate application of the usurious rate. Thus, the District Court's calculation was affirmed on equitable principles. Confederated Tribes of the Grand Ronde Community of Oreg. v. Quantum Five, Inc., 2004 MT 140, 321 M 396, 91 P3d 1255 (2004), distinguishing Bermes v. Sylling, 179 M 448, 587 P2d 377 (1978), and E.C.A. Envtl. Management Serv., Inc. v. Toenyes, 208 M 336, 679 P2d 213 (1984).

Applicability of Usury to Postdefault Interest: Montana usury statutes apply to detentions of money as well as loans and forebearances. The statutory definition of interest in 31-1-104 includes postdefault interest. Therefore, the District Court correctly applied the usury penalty in a case in which a lender sought to charge 18% interest in the event of default on a loan. Scarr v. Boyer, 250 M 248, 818 P2d 381, 48 St. Rep. 910 (1991).

Requirement of Written Agreement Not Permissive: The lower court held that certain loans between the parties could not accrue interest because minutes of a meeting did not constitute a written agreement pertaining to the payment of interest. The appellants argued that the use of the word "may" in the statute meant that a writing was not necessary. The Supreme Court held that the statute was not permissive and that a written agreement was required. World Realty Ltd. v. Goulding, 245 M 188, 800 P2d 161, 47 St. Rep. 1974 (1990).

Legal Rate When Note Signed Applicable for Loan Duration: The legal rate of interest at the time a note was signed in 1981 was 17%. Defendant claimed on appeal that the appropriate rate should have been 9½% because that was the maximum legal rate in 1987 when demand was made. However, under this section, the legal rate in 1981 applied for the duration of the loan. Poulsen's, Inc. v. Wood, 232 M 411, 756 P2d 1162, 45 St. Rep. 1154 (1988).

Interest Rate — Highest Contractual Rate: The provision of a lease agreement that required interest to be paid on delinquent payments at "the highest contractual rate permitted by law" clearly required the contractual rate at 10% as established by 31-1-107 (before amendment in 1981) to be applied, and not the 6% legal rate (prior to 1985 amendment to 31-1-106). IFG Leasing Co. v. Schultz, 217 M 434, 705 P2d 576, 42 St. Rep. 1307 (1985).

Calculation of Usury Penalty Using Maturity Date of Note Rather Than Trial Date Affirmed: Plaintiff foreclosed on a loan to defendant. Defendant contended that the loan terms contained a usurious interest rate. The District Court agreed and calculated a usury penalty against plaintiff using the date that the note was executed until the maturity date of the loan. Defendant argued that the rate should instead have been imposed through the date of the trial. On appeal, the Supreme Court found no precedent to support defendant's position. As in Rustics of Lindbergh Lake, Inc. v. Quantum Five, Inc., 2004 MT 140, 321 M 396, 91 P3d 1255 (2004), distinguishing Bermes v. Sylling, 179 M 448, 587 P2d 377 (1978), and E.C.A. Envtl. Management Serv., Inc. v. Toenyes, 208 M 336, 679 P2d 213 (1984).

Applicability of Usury to Postdefault Interest: Montana usury statutes apply to detentions of money as well as loans and forebearances. The statutory definition of interest in 31-1-104 includes postdefault interest. Therefore, the District Court correctly applied the usury penalty in a case in which a lender sought to charge 18% interest in the event of default on a loan. Scarr v. Boyer, 250 M 248, 818 P2d 381, 48 St. Rep. 910 (1991).

Intent Establishing Usury in Fact: An out-of-state creditor who was not aware of the Montana usury limit claimed District Court error in applying the usury penalty because the creditor did not intend to circumvent the usury statute. However, under the rationale of Mont. Nat'l Bank of Bozeman v. Kolokotrones, 167 M 92, 535 P2d 1017 (1975), the only intent required for usury is the intent to charge a particular rate of interest that is usurious in fact, regardless of whether a creditor knows the rate is illegal. Scarr v. Boyer, 250 M 248, 818 P2d 381, 48 St. Rep. 910 (1991).

Intent as Necessary Part of Usurious Transaction: In order for a transaction to be usurious, there must be an intent that the lender is to take more than the legal rate of interest for the sum loaned. Poulsen's, Inc. v. Wood, 232 M 411, 756 P2d 1162, 45 St. Rep. 1154 (1988), citing Hanson v. Bonner, 202 M 505, 661 P2d 421 (1983).

Prevailing Party: While no one factor should be considered in determining the prevailing party, the party that survives an action involving a counterclaim with the net judgment should generally be considered the successful party. Rustics of Lindbergh Lake, Inc. v. Lease, 213 M 246, 690 P2d 440, 41 St. Rep. 2092 (1984).

Assessment of Penalty for Usurious Demand Promissory Note up to Time of Trial Held Proper: Appellants loaned $7,000 to respondents in exchange for a demand promissory note at 11½% interest. In a suit for payment on the note, the District Court found that the note was usurious and calculated the forfeiture penalty based on the note's interest from the date of its making up to the time of trial. On appeal, appellants conceded that the note was usurious but claimed that the District Court had calculated the statutory penalty incorrectly. Appellants contended that since demand was made prior to the filing of the action on the note, the note matured at that time and appellants cannot be penalized for usurious interest after that date. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that since appellants did not cancel their rights under the note after demand, the obligation on the note continued after demand and through the trial. Therefore, assessment of the usury penalty up to the date of the trial was proper under 31-1-108. E.C.A. Envtl. Management Serv., Inc. v. Toenyes, 208 M 336, 679 P2d 213, 41 St. Rep. 388 (1984), distinguished in Rustics of Lindbergh Lake, Inc. v. Lease, 213 M 246, 690 P2d 440, 41 St. Rep. 2092 (1984).

"Prevailing Party" When Usury Penalty Assessed Against Party Exceeds That Party's Recovery: Appellants filed an action to recover money due on a promissory note that was usurious on its face. The District Court assessed a usury penalty against appellants which exceeded the balance due on the note. Thus, the net judgment was in favor of respondents. The court then assessed attorney fees against the appellants. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that respondents had been properly found to be the prevailing party. E.C.A. Envtl. Management Serv., Inc. v. Toenyes, 208 M 336, 679 P2d 213, 41 St. Rep. 388 (1984).

Usury — Statute of Limitations: Withholding of interest by the defendant has the same effect as payment of interest under the usury statutes, and under 31-1-108 the 2-year Statute of Limitations applies. Arrowhead, Inc. v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 179 M 510, 587 P2d 411 (1978).

Actual Payment Unnecessary to Invoke Penalty: Actual payment of usurious interest is not a condition precedent to the forfeiture penalty contained in 31-1-108(1). Bermes v. Sylling, 179 M 448, 587 P2d 377 (1978), distinguished in Rustics of Lindbergh Lake, Inc. v. Lease, 213 M 246, 690 P2d 440, 41 St. Rep. 2092 (1984).

Intent: Letter demanding payment and including a schedule of principal and interest payments was sufficient to establish the intent of the bank to take more than the legal amount of interest. Mont. Nat'l Bank of Bozeman v. Kolokotrones, 167 M 92, 535 P2d 1017 (1975).

Penalty: Computation of penalty for usury does not rest on the difference between the amount of interest charged and the maximum amount that could have legally been charged, but is simply twice the amount of interest appearing on the face of the note. Mont. Nat'l Bank of Bozeman v. Kolokotrones, 167 M 92, 535 P2d 1017 (1975).

Demand for Double Penalty: Demand must be made within 2 years after payment of usurious interest under 31-1-108(2), but such demand need not be made and such limitation does not apply to obtain relief under 31-1-108(1). Bowden v. Gabel, 105 M 477, 76 P2d 334 (1937).

Pleadings: Borrower from a building and loan association must specially plead usury by allegations clearly showing the amount of such usurious interest claimed. U.S. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Gardiner, 87 M 586, 289 P 555 (1930).

31-1-109. When interest becomes part of principal.

Case Notes

Simple Interest Payable Absent Agreement for Payment of Compound Interest: The District Court ordered one partner to pay simple interest on the amount owed to a partnership for the purchase of a partnership interest. The other partner contended that compound interest rather than simple interest should be paid because the amount owed was analogous to the debt on a loan that required payment of compound interest. The Supreme Court noted that under this section, parties may agree in writing to the payment of compound interest, but absent an agreement in writing, Montana law does not provide for compound interest, so the District Court did not err in requiring payment of simple interest on the deficit capital account. McCormick v. Brevig, 2007 MT 195, 338 M 370, 169 P3d 352 (2007).

No Retroactive Effect: This section, providing that parties may contract in writing that unpaid interest shall become a part of the principal and draw interest, did not affect notes or agreements entered before its adoption. An antecedent agreement to pay interest on interest to become due would be void; however, the parties could substitute a new note for an old one which was due and incorporate in the new note the unpaid interest of the old note. The guarantor of the note and its renewals was required to pay interest on the accrued interest of the old note which was made part of the principal. He was not relieved of his obligation on the basis that his burden was increased. Stanford v. Coram, 26 M 285, 67 P 1005 (1902).

Case Notes

Points Charged as Flat Fee on Loans Not Considered Interest — Charging Unauthorized Fees Violative of Consumer Loan Act: A lender charged a loan fee, called points, upon the origination of real estate-secured loans. The lender contended that the points were considered interest on the loan and were thus permissible under the Montana Consumer Loan Act (CLA). The Supreme Court disagreed. Interest is generally defined as a charge made for the use, forbearance, or detention of money. A flat fee front-loaded into a loan, computed as a percentage of the loan but bearing no direct relation to actual costs of specific services performed and which did not constitute a charge for use of the lender's money over time, is not interest, but rather is a fee charged by the lender for making the loan. Such fees are not authorized by the CLA and are thus prohibited. To protect borrowers, the court declined to interpret the CLA in a way that contains a loophole whereby predatory lenders could add points onto the beginning of an interest-bearing loan and thereby escape the requirement that the points be at least partially refunded if the loan is prepaid or refinanced. (See 2005 amendment to 31-1-104.) Wombold v. Associates Financial Serv. Co. of Mont., Inc., 2004 MT 397, 325 M 290, 104 P3d 1080 (2004).

Case Notes

Contract Not Required in Retail Sales Agreement When Sale Not Intended to Be on Installment Basis: Defendants purchased lumber from plaintiff's retail lumber business. When payment was not received within 30 days, plaintiff sent a bill requesting payment in full and adding interest on the account at 18% a year. The District Court granted summary judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appealed on grounds that summary judgment was improper because there was no written agreement between the parties providing for late payment charges, as required by 31-1-501, and cited the definition of retail seller in this section, which requires that a retail seller have a written agreement with the retail buyer. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly concluded that a written agreement is not required to charge and collect a late payment on any accounts 30 days past due in the retail sales arena when the sale is not anticipated to be on an installment basis. Sales under 31-1-501 do not apply to retail installment contracts or retail charge account agreements regulated under this part, so the definition in this section is inapplicable to an interpretation of 31-1-501. Aldrich & Co. v. Ellis, 2002 MT 177, 311 M 1, 52 P3d 388 (2002).

Determination of Vehicle Ownership — Installment Sales Contract Not Indicative of Ownership for Insurance Purposes: Jordet, an adult, jointly purchased a vehicle for the exclusive use of his minor sister-in-law, who made the downpayment, repaid registration and license fees, made the only installment payment, purchased separate insurance, possessed the only keys, and maintained sole use and control of the vehicle. The District Court decided that the term "owned vehicle" in Jordet's automobile policy included the jointly owned vehicle and that Jordet's signature on the installment sales contract conclusively placed the vehicle under his policy. The Supreme Court reversed, noting that the purchase of property and the insurance of property are distinct transactions and that Jordet's signature on the sales contract did not establish ownership for insurance purposes. Implicit in ownership is the ability to control how, when, where, and by whom the property will be used. Since Jordet never exercised any of the indicia of ownership that would be compatible with his insuring the vehicle, it was not an "owned vehicle" under the terms of his policy. Truck Ins. Exch. v. Nelson, 228 M 233, 743 P2d 572, 44 St. Rep. 1482 (1987).

Lease With Option to Purchase — Landlord Responsibility for Taxes: The city entered into an agreement with Pollard for construction and lease of a vehicle storage building, with an option to purchase throughout the term of the lease. After the city occupied the building, Pollard received notice that taxes had been assessed and were owing. Pollard maintained that the city had, by terms of the lease agreement, purchased the building and that he was not responsible for the taxes. He relied on the holding in Hunter v. Bozeman, 216 M 251, 700 P2d 184, 42 St. Rep. 784 (1985), that the lease was in fact a sale to the city and that the building was in effect a public works project. The Supreme Court found that the option to buy was not a sale and imposed no obligation to purchase. Rather, it found that the agreement fit the definition of a retail installment contract. Title bestowing ownership had not transferred to the city, so owner Pollard was responsible for the taxes on the building. Pollard v. Bozeman, 228 M 176, 741 P2d 776, 44 St. Rep. 1436 (1987).

Lease Not Type Included in Definition of "Retail Installment Contract": "Retail installment contract" is defined in this section to include certain types of leases in which the lessee may ultimately purchase the leased goods. In this case, the lease did not provide in any way for the lessees to become owners of the leased property, so the transaction did not come within this part. Doll v. Major Muffler Centers, Inc., 208 M 401, 687 P2d 48, 41 St. Rep. 429 (1984), followed in Pollard v. Bozeman, 228 M 176, 741 P2d 776, 44 St. Rep. 1436 (1987).

Credit Sale of Diesel Fuel Held Neither "Retail Installment Contract" nor "Retail Charge Account Agreement": When in a sale of diesel fuel the buyer signed an invoice creating an obligation to pay within 30 days and providing for assessment of a finance charge if that obligation was not fulfilled, the Supreme Court ruled that the transaction did not involve installment payments and was not subject to the Montana Retail Installment Sales Act. E.C.A. Envtl. Management Serv., Inc. v. Toenyes, 208 M 336, 679 P2d 213, 41 St. Rep. 388 (1984).

2013 Amendment: Chapter 63 in (1) substituted current language concerning notice and opportunity for an administrative hearing for former text that read: "Any person who knowingly violates a provision of this part or engages in the business of a sales finance company in this state without a license as provided in this part is guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than 6 months, or both"; inserted (2) concerning penalties, restitution, and reimbursement; inserted (3) concerning suspending, revoking, or conditioning licenses; in (4) at beginning inserted "in addition to other penalties provided by law", before "accidental" inserted "isolated", and inserted last sentence prohibiting recovery or retention of erroneous overcharges; in (5) substituted "this part" for "subsection (3)"; deleted former (3) that read: "(3) A person may not engage in any device or subterfuge intended to evade the requirements of this chapter including assisting a borrower to obtain a loan at a rate of interest prohibited by Montana law, making loans disguised as personal property sales and leaseback transactions, or disguising loan proceeds as cash rebates for the pretextual installment sale of goods or services"; inserted (6) regarding service of process; and made minor changes in style. Case Notes

Late Payment Penalty as Percentage of Outstanding Balance: A finance charge is the expression of the cost of the credit as a dollar amount. It includes but is not limited to interest. Defendant signed a retail installment contract that provided that in the event of default, the finance charge would continue to accrue at the annual percentage rate, which was established in the contract at 12%. Defendant argued that the denomination of late-payment charges as finance charges violated this section of the Montana Retail Installment Sales Act. The Supreme Court found that argument to be an unduly restrictive attempt to exalt form over substance, in light of defendant's agreement to a late payment penalty of 12% of the outstanding principal. The District Court did not err in treating this late payment structure as equivalent to a simple rate of interest. Cessna Fin. Corp. v. Chambers, 252 M 315, 828 P2d 1373, 49 St. Rep. 271 (1992).

2013 Amendment: Chapter 63 in (4) substituted "at least 45 days before" for "in the billing cycle prior to". Amendment effective October 1, 2013.

2010 Amendment by Initiative: Initiative Measure No. 164, proposed by initiative petition and approved at the general election held November 2, 2010, in (1) and (2) at beginning deleted "Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law" and at end inserted "but the finance charge may not exceed 36% per annum".

Findings: Section 1, Initiative Measure No. 164, provided: "The people of Montana find that some lenders are charging Montanans over 400% interest annually, that excessive interest rates can lead Montana families into a debt trap of repeat borrowing, that the United States congress has enacted laws capping interest rates on loans to military families at 36% annually, and that responsible small loans are available at interest rates of 36% annually or less."

Effective Date: Section 9, Initiative Measure No. 164, provided: "[This act] applies to all transactions governed hereby entered into on or after January 1, 2011."

1997 Amendment: Chapter 267 substituted (3) regarding computation of the finance charge for (2)(a) and (2)(b) that read: "(a) Except as provided in subsection (2)(b), the finance charge shall be computed from month to month (which need not be a calendar month) or other regular billing cycle period by using the average daily balance of the account during the billing cycle without including in the computation the amount of purchases charged to the account during that billing cycle.

(b) Nothing in this section prevents a retail seller and a buyer from agreeing to the computation of the finance charge by using the ending balance of the account as of the last day of the billing cycle period less the amount of purchases charged to the account during that billing cycle"; in (4), in second sentence after "change in the", substituted "billing cycle" for "two billing cycles"; adjusted subsection references; and made minor changes in style.

1987 Amendment: At beginning of (2)(a) inserted exception clause, near middle substituted "average daily balance" for "ending balance", substituted "during" for "as of the last day of", and substituted "without including in the computation" for "less"; and inserted (2)(b) allowing retail seller and buyer to agree to compute finance charge by using ending balance.

1983 Amendment: Inserted (6) allowing a maximum finance charge of 50 cents if the charge determined pursuant to subsection (2) is less than that amount and made 1981 amendment permanent. (Amendment was to terminate July 1, 1983—sec. 5, Ch. 276, L. 1981.)

1981 Amendment: Section 1, Ch. 276, L. 1981, deleted all of the former section except the opening phrase of (1) ending with "a retail installment contract shall" and inserted the rest of the section. The former text read: "(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the finance charge included in a retail installment contract shall not exceed the following schedule:

(a) as to motor vehicles:

(i) class 1—any new motor vehicle designated by the manufacturer by a year model not earlier than the year in which the sale is made, $7 per $100 per year;

(ii) class 2—any new motor vehicle not in class 1 and any used motor vehicle designated by the manufacturer by a year model of the same or not more than 2 years prior to the year in which the sale is made, $9 per $100 per year;

(iii) class 3—any used motor vehicle not in class 2 and designated by the manufacturer by a year model more than 2 years prior to the year in which the sale is made, $11 per $100 per year;

(b) as to any industrial or construction equipment primarily designed for or used in construction, logging, mining, or other industrial business, the price of which is over $5,000, $9 per $100 per year. This subsection shall not apply to agricultural equipment.

(c) as to any manufactured structure or recreational vehicle, $9 per $100 per year;

(d) as to services and goods other than as provided under subsections (1)(a), (1)(b), and (1)(c) above:

(i) on so much of the principal balance as does not exceed $300, $11 per $100 per year;

(ii) if the principal balance exceeds $300 but is less than $1,000, $9 per $100 per year on that portion over $300;

(iii) if the principal balance exceeds $1,000, $7 per $100 per year on that portion over $1,000.

(2) Such finance charge shall be computed on the principal balance as determined under 31-1-231(5) on contracts payable in successive monthly payments substantially equal in amount from the date of the contract until the maturity of the final installment, notwithstanding that the total time balance thereof is required to be paid in installments. A minimum finance charge of $20 may be charged on any retail installment contract.

(3) When a retail installment contract provides for payment other than in equal successive monthly installments, the finance charge may be a rate which will provide the same yield as is permitted on monthly payment contracts under subsections (1) and (2) hereof, having due regard for the schedule of payments in the contract.

(4) Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, a retail charge account agreement may provide for and the seller or holder may charge, collect, and receive a finance charge as specified herein for the privilege of paying in installments thereunder. The finance charge may be computed from month to month (which need not be a calendar month) or other regular billing cycle period by applying a rate not to exceed 1 ½% for each such monthly period to an amount (not including any unpaid finance charge) not in excess of the greatest of:

(a) the average daily balance in the account in the billing cycle period;

(b) the ending balance of the account as of the last day of the billing cycle less the amount of purchases charged to the account during that billing cycle; or

(c) the median amount within a $10 range within which such average daily balance or beginning balance falls, provided the seller applies the same rate of finance charge to all such balances within such range.

(5) If the finance charge so determined pursuant to (4) above for such monthly period is less than 50 cents, a maximum finance charge not in excess of 50 cents may be charged, received, and collected for such period."

Case Notes

Retail Installment Sale — Evidence Supporting — Allowable Interest: Defendant failed to make payment for materials supplied by plaintiff. The invoices of purchase stated that an interest rate of 1.5% a month would be levied on past-due accounts. Plaintiff filed a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) representing the amount due and the service charge of 1.5% a month. Plaintiff sued to foreclose the lien. Defendant filed a confession of judgment for the full amount of purchase, plus interest at a legal rate. Plaintiff rejected the confession of judgment. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for the amount of purchase, plus interest at a rate of 10% a year. Plaintiff appealed seeking interest at the 1.5% a month rate. The Supreme Court held that the invoices, two of which were signed by both parties, describing the material purchased and stating the amount, including the interest rate to be charged, were sufficient to obligate defendant to pay the 1.5% charge on the unpaid balance. Although the invoices did not meet all the requirements of a retail installment contract, defendant's admission as to their authenticity and confession of judgment more than adequately evidenced that the purchases were retail installment sales. O'Neil Lumber Co. v. Nickelodeon Co., 190 M 25, 617 P2d 1291, 37 St. Rep. 1731 (1980).

Constitutionality: This act is constitutional both before and after the 1971 amendments making it applicable to revolving charge accounts. The finance charges permitted by this act are time-price differentials included in the price of goods purchased on credit and payable in installments and as such are not subject to constitutional or statutory limitations on interest rates. The act is a codification of the time-price doctrine. The act is not a special or local law regulating the rate of interest on money in violation of Art. V, sec. 26, 1889 Mont. Const. (Art. VI, sec. 12, 1972 Mont. Const.), since the finance charges imposed pursuant to the act are time-price differentials rather than interest. There is a reasonable basis for the classification and different treatment of those rates involved in revolving charge transactions. The act does not grant special or exclusive privileges as prohibited by Art. V, sec. 26, 1889 Mont. Const. (Art. VI, sec. 12, 1972 Mont. Const.), or interfere with the right to acquire property guaranteed by Art. III, sec. 3, 1889 Mont. Const. (Art. II, sec. 3, 1972 Mont. Const.), since the legislative classifications in the act are constitutionally permissible. Cecil v. Allied Stores Corp., 162 M 491, 513 P2d 704 (1973).

Revolving Charge Account Sales: This act, prior to amendment in 1971, regulated only "closed end" retail installment contracts and not revolving charge accounts. A retailer who imposed finance charges on revolving charge accounts on basis of balance from previous monthly billing cycle prior to 1971 amendment of this act was not in violation of this act since it was inapplicable. Cecil v. Allied Stores Corp., 162 M 491, 513 P2d 704 (1973).

Interest on Conditional Sales Contracts: In a diversity action to recover the balance due on a note and conditional sales contract executed and delivered by defendants to a North Dakota corporation and assigned by it to plaintiff, where defendants contended that the rate of interest charged them exceeded the maximum rate of 10% permitted by this section (amended by Ch. 276, L. 1981) and constituted a special law regulating the rate of interest on money, proscribed by Art. V, sec. 26, 1889 Mont. Const. (Art. VI, sec. 12, 1972 Mont. Const.), the federal court applied the doctrine of abstention and postponed further action until the issue was determined by the Supreme Court of Montana. B-W Acceptance Corp. v. Torgerson, 234 F. Supp. 214 (D.C. Mont. 1964).

Where the amount of credit is less than $1, no refund need be made.

(3) In any contract where the period of the contract exceeds 61 months, the amount of such refund is the portion of the original finance charge that is applicable to all fully unexpired months in the contract as originally scheduled or, if deferred, as deferred, following the date of prepayment. Part 4
Pawnbrokers

Part Case Notes

State Regulation of Reservation Pawnshops: Montana has a substantial and important interest in protecting all of its citizens, Indian and non-Indian alike, from dishonest pawnbrokers, regardless of whether the pawnshop is located on or off the reservation. This purpose is effectuated by requiring accurate and detailed records of transactions in order to prevent the charging of excessive interest rates and to facilitate tracing of stolen merchandise. Because pawnshops are open to the entire public, the state has a substantial interest in regulating these businesses, including those located within the exterior boundaries of an Indian reservation. St. v. Schaefer, 239 M 437, 781 P2d 264, 46 St. Rep. 1811 (1989), distinguishing St. v. Greenwalt, 204 M 196, 663 P2d 1178 (1983).

Warranty of Title Breached When Pawnbroker Sold Stolen Goods: Defendant pawnshop operator who sold stolen property to plaintiff refused to give plaintiff a refund after the property was recovered by police. Defendant argued that he disclaimed any warranty of title to goods sold in his business by posting a sign alerting buyers that merchandise is sold "as is" and by writing the same notation on his sales slips. Defendant clearly breached the warranty of clear title under the U.C.C., 30-2-312, when he sold stolen goods because neither a thief nor his successor pass clear title to stolen goods. It was irrelevant that defendant claimed he did not know the goods were stolen. Warranty of title is not subject to the disclaimers found in 30-2-316 pertaining to fitness and merchantability. Defendant's conduct does not meet the disclaimer of warranty of title found in 30-2-312 because there was no agreement between defendant and plaintiff regarding the title of the goods. Brokke v. Williams, 235 M 305, 766 P2d 1311, 46 St. Rep. 6 (1989).

Return of Property — Conflict Between Civil and Criminal Statutes: When property is taken from a pawnbroker and held as evidence for an underlying criminal prosecution, the provisions of the criminal procedure statutes governing return of property apply rather than the civil pawnbroker statutes. The criminal statutes are the particular and specific statutes, and the pawnbroker statutes are general. The pawnbroker statutes control the situation when a private citizen discovers his property at a pawnbroker's shop, and no criminal prosecution grows out of the incident. Findings: Section 1, Initiative Measure No. 164, provided: "The people of Montana find that some lenders are charging Montanans over 400% interest annually, that excessive interest rates can lead Montana families into a debt trap of repeat borrowing, that the United States congress has enacted laws capping interest rates on loans to military families at 36% annually, and that responsible small loans are available at interest rates of 36% annually or less."

Effective Date: Section 9, Initiative Measure No. 164, provided: "[This act] applies to all transactions governed hereby entered into on or after January 1, 2011."

1993 Amendment: Chapter 258 in second sentence of (1), after "charge", substituted "a fee of more than 25% of the amount of the loan for a 30-day period" for "more than 3% a month for interest, commission, discount, storage, and caring for property pledged" and inserted third and fourth sentences setting a maximum fee for extending a pawn agreement and clarifying what constitutes a fee; inserted (2) regarding forfeiture in cases of an excess fee; inserted (3) providing for recovery of attorney fees and an amount double the fee paid and providing a 2-year statute of limitations; and made minor changes in style. Part 5
Retail Sales — Late Payment Charges

31-1-501. Late payment charges — accounts receivable for merchandise sold at retail.

Case Notes

Contract Not Required in Retail Sales Agreement When Sale Not Intended to Be on Installment Basis: Defendants purchased lumber from plaintiff's retail lumber business. When payment was not received within 30 days, plaintiff sent a bill requesting payment in full and adding interest on the account at 18% a year. The District Court granted summary judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appealed on grounds that summary judgment was improper because there was no written agreement between the parties providing for late payment charges, as required by this section, and cited the definition of retail seller in 31-1-202, which requires that a retail seller have a written agreement with the retail buyer. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly concluded that a written agreement is not required to charge and collect a late payment on any accounts 30 days past due in the retail sales arena when the sale is not anticipated to be on an installment basis. Sales under this section do not apply to retail installment contracts or retail charge account agreements regulated under Title 31, ch. 1, part 2, so the definition in 31-1-202 is inapplicable to an interpretation of this section. Aldrich & Co. v. Ellis, 2002 MT 177, 311 M 1, 52 P3d 388 (2002).

Statement of Account Not in Compliance With Statutory Requirements — Late Payment Fee Not Chargeable: A seller is mandatorily required to set forth the provisions in 31-1-502(1) in the monthly statements supplied to a buyer, and if the statements fail to state any of the items, the late payment fee of 1½% a month provided for in this section may not be charged. Here, a monthly statement failed to state that a late payment fee would be incurred 30 days after purchase, that the interest charged was simple interest, and that the buyer could pay the total unpaid balance at any time. The District Court committed reversible error in holding that the monthly statement was in compliance with the statutory requirements. Aldrich & Co. v. Ellis, 2002 MT 177, 311 M 1, 52 P3d 388 (2002).

Collection Agency — Collection of Bad Check Penalty Prohibited: The 2007 version of 31-1-704 exempted from the Montana Deferred Deposit Loan Act a collection agency that had entered into an agreement with a payday lender for the collection of claims owed or due. Because bad check penalties could never be owed or due to a payday lender pursuant to 31-1-722 (2007), the collection agency lost its exempt status when it pursued bad check penalties. Therefore, the District Court erred in allowing the collection agency to assess bad check penalties against the defendant's payday loan checks. The case was reversed and remanded to the District Court to determine whether the collection agency intentionally violated the Act under 31-1-722 (2007). Credit Serv. Co., Inc. v. Case Notes

Elements of Issuing Bad Checks Supportive of Information: The County Attorney filed an information against McWilliams for issuing bad checks in connection with a construction business. McWilliams asserted that the information should be dismissed because the series of transactions involving the checks were an illegal series of deferred deposit loans, so McWilliams could not be criminally prosecuted. However, 31-1-723, which prohibits deferred deposit loans, applies only to licensees under Title 31, ch. 1, part 7. None of the parties involved were licensees, so the statute did not apply. McWilliams also contended that the checks did not meet the definition of negotiable instruments in 30-3-104 because they were not payable on demand, but rather were in the nature of a future promise. However, the checks contained no restrictive endorsement, and although the parties to whom the checks were written agreed to refrain from cashing them immediately, the checks were in fact payable on demand and met the statutory definition. McWilliams also cited 45-2-211 in arguing a consent defense because the parties consented to take the checks and hold them, but that argument also failed because even though the parties agreed to hold the checks, they did not consent to nonpayment or to having McWilliams stop payment altogether. McWilliams next asserted that under St. v. Patterson, 75 M 315, 243 P 355 (1926), the information was defective because it contained no assertion of an intent to defraud. The statutory language under which Patterson was charged in 1926 required a showing of intent to defraud, but the current statute, 45-6-316, contains no intent to defraud element, so the information was not defective in that regard. There was sufficient evidence to charge McWilliams with issuing bad checks, and the District Court did not err in denying McWilliams' pretrial motion to dismiss the information. St. v. McWilliams, 2008 MT 59, 341 M 517, 178 P3d 121 (2008).

Case Notes

Elements of Issuing Bad Checks Supportive of Information: The County Attorney filed an information against McWilliams for issuing bad checks in connection with a construction business. McWilliams asserted that the information should be dismissed because the series of transactions involving the checks were an illegal series of deferred deposit loans, so McWilliams could not be criminally prosecuted. However, 31-1-723, which prohibits deferred deposit loans, applies only to licensees under Title 31, ch. 1, part 7. None of the parties involved were licensees, so the statute did not apply. McWilliams also contended that the checks did not meet the definition of negotiable instruments in 30-3-104 because they were not payable on demand, but rather were in the nature of a future promise. However, the checks contained no restrictive endorsement, and although the parties to whom the checks were written agreed to refrain from cashing them immediately, the checks were in fact payable on demand and met the statutory definition. McWilliams also cited 45-2-211 in arguing a consent defense because the parties consented to take the checks and hold them, but that argument also failed because even though the parties agreed to hold the checks, they did not consent to nonpayment or to having McWilliams stop payment altogether. McWilliams next asserted that under St. v. Patterson, 75 M 315, 243 P 355 (1926), the information was defective because it contained no assertion of an intent to defraud. The statutory language under which Patterson was charged in 1926 required a showing of intent to defraud, but the current statute, 45-6-316, contains no intent to defraud element, so the information was not defective in that regard. There was sufficient evidence to charge McWilliams with issuing bad checks, and the District Court did not err in denying McWilliams' pretrial motion to dismiss the information. St. v. McWilliams, 2008 MT 59, 341 M 517, 178 P3d 121 (2008).

Part 1
General Provisions — Definitions

Part Case Notes

Common-Law Right to Setoff Clarified: The right of setoff exists between any mutual debtors and creditors where the debts have matured and the parties mutually are debtors and creditors of and to each other. It is a general rule that when a depositor is indebted to a bank and the debts are mutual, the bank may apply deposits to a payment of the debt due it by the depositor, provided there is no express agreement to the contrary and the deposit is not specifically applicable to some other purpose. For a bank to establish the right to setoff, the fund to be set off must be owed by the bank to the debtor, the fund must be deposited without restrictions, and the existing indebtedness must be due and owing. Victor Werlhof Aviation Ins. v. Farmers St. Bank, 237 M 51, 771 P2d 962, 46 St. Rep. 613 (1989). See also Sec. St. Bank v. First Nat'l Bank, 78 M 389, 254 P 417 (1927).

Account Stated — What Constitutes: The basic ingredients of an account stated are an agreement that the items of the account and the balance struck are correct and an express or implied agreement for the payment of the balance. Implied agreement for the payment of the balance may be presumed where there are a course of dealings, an antecedent indebtedness, and retention of a statement of the account for an unreasonable length of time without objection. Johnson v. Tindall, 195 M 165, 635 P2d 266 (1981), followed in Mattson v. Julian, 209 M 48, 678 P2d 654, 41 St. Rep. 544 (1984), and in Able, Inc. v. Kuzara, 241 M 155, 785 P2d 1021, 47 St. Rep. 158 (1990).

Criminal Liability — Intentional Breach of Fiduciary Duty: Defendant entered a lease agreement with Town Pump, Incorporated to operate a gas station. Defendant was required to make daily deposits to Town Pump's bank account as payment for gasoline sold. A gasoline audit revealed defendant had failed to deposit $6,377 of proceeds due Town Pump. Defendant contended that a debtor-creditor relationship existed and that he only had a contractual duty to repay the debt, and that a breach of this civil obligation could not be the basis for criminal liability. The evidence showed Town Pump entrusted defendant with the gasoline it supplied with the understanding that its share of sale proceeds would be deposited to its account. The jury was presented with the factual question of when title to the gasoline passed. The jury concluded title did not pass upon delivery. Through the course of dealing in the months preceding the audit, defendant demonstrated his understanding of the entrustment and his responsibility. The deviation from this recognized fiduciary duty when he falsified accounting reports to the company clearly indicated an intent to purposely deprive Town Pump of its proceeds. The deliberate attempt to conceal retention of the proceeds is inconsistent with an ordinary debtor-creditor relationship. There was nothing in the record to show the parties' intent to create a debtor-creditor relationship. Defendant could not avoid criminal liability for taking money entrusted to him by calling it a loan. St. v. Frederick, 208 M 112, 676 P2d 213, 41 St. Rep. 207 (1984).

Case Notes

No Breach of Duty to Company by Repayment of Loans to Members Before Payment of Company Debts: On the morning of a concert sponsored by plaintiff company, several members loaned money to the company to pay the bands so the concert could proceed. After the concert, the members' loans were repaid from concert proceeds rather than paying a company debt to a bank, ultimately leaving the company insolvent. Some members of the company contended that this act constituted an unlawful distribution of company assets and that the members who authorized the loan repayments were personally liable to the company for the amounts that they caused to be paid to themselves. The District Court granted summary judgment to defendants, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under 35-8-604, a company may not make distributions to members if the distributions render the company unable to pay its debts, which includes a repayment of capital contributions that a member made to the company. However, in this case, the amounts advanced to the company to salvage the concert were personal loans made in the ordinary course of company business, and 35-8-504 allows a company to reimburse members for money loaned to the company, so the company had both the obligation and the right to repay the members' loans. The company had more legitimate debt than it could pay, and the decision to repay the members' loans was simply a business decision. Even though the members who authorized the payment were acting in a managerial position, they were not liable for making a legitimate business decision to pay one creditor in preference to another. Lynes v. Helm, 2007 MT 226, 339 M 120, 168 P3d 651 (2007).

Finding of Fraudulent Conveyance Rather Than Payment in Preference Affirmed: Plaintiffs who leased mineral rights to a peat extraction operation from Foss obtained a $118,343.59 default judgment against Foss for intentional interference with access to the peat resources and for assault on one of the plaintiffs with a rifle. Foss conveyed his 44% interest in the property to his then-wife Fedder for $1, which gave her an 88% interest, and Foss's children from a previous marriage held the remaining 12% interest. Their marriage was subsequently dissolved. The District Court held that the property conveyance was fraudulent and allowed plaintiffs to levy execution upon the property. Fedder maintained on appeal that the transfer of title to her was in effect a payment in preference, allowable under this section, that was made in recognition that she would be entitled to maintenance or support from Foss when they dissolved their marriage. However, Fedder produced no evidence that she was a creditor of Foss at the time of the conveyance. The marriage was intact at the time of the conveyance, and the property transfer was not part of the dissolution, but rather preceded it. The District Court's decision was affirmed. Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Fedder, 2000 MT 87, 299 M 206, 999 P2d 315, 57 St. Rep. 375 (2000).

Prosecution of Fraudulent Conveyance Action After Filing of Bankruptcy Petition Proper: Plaintiffs who leased mineral rights to a peat extraction operation from Foss obtained a $118,343.59 default judgment against Foss for intentional interference with access to the peat resources and for assault on one of the plaintiffs with a rifle in 1989. Foss transferred his 44% interest in the property to his then-wife Fedder for $1, which gave her an 88% interest, and Foss's children from a previous marriage held the remaining 12% interest. The marriage was subsequently dissolved, and Foss filed a bankruptcy petition in 1994, listing numerous creditors and no assets. Foss was dropped as a defendant, and plaintiffs pursued a fraudulent conveyance action against Fedder to collect on their judgment. The District Court voided the conveyance from Foss to Fedder, and granted defendants the right to levy execution upon the property. Fedder appealed, asserting that when Foss filed the bankruptcy petition, the bankruptcy trustee acquired the right to avoid prepetition fraudulent conveyances and that plaintiffs thus lost their standing to pursue their claim. The Supreme Court noted that section 524(e) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that discharge of a debt does not affect the liability of any other entity for the debt. After the close of a bankruptcy, creditors are free to resume or commence a fraudulent conveyance action against the transferee in state court independent of the bankruptcy trustee, even when collection efforts may have occurred during pendency of the bankruptcy. Here, the trustee was appointed after this action was filed, and the Bankruptcy Court and the trustee had notice of the action during pendency of the bankruptcy, so the District Court did not err in granting the fraudulent conveyance judgment after conclusion of the bankruptcy proceedings. Further, pursuant to Cahill-Mooney Constr. Co. v. Ayres, 140 M 464, 373 P2d 703 (1962), plaintiffs were not required to obtain a lien prior to bringing the fraudulent conveyance claim. Nothing mandates that a plaintiff file a proof of claim in Bankruptcy Court to preserve the right to pursue a fraudulent conveyance action against a third party transferee like Fedder. Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Fedder, 2000 MT 87, 299 M 206, 999 P2d 315, 57 St. Rep. 375 (2000). See also Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Davis, 733 F2d 1083 (4th Cir. 1984), and Kathy B. Enterprises, Inc. v. U.S., 779 F2d 1413 (9th Cir. 1986).

Contingent Liability: Debtor's sale of property to pay all creditors except one did not violate this statute in light of fact that the excepted debt was contingent liability which the debtor could reasonably anticipate would not become due and owing. White v. Nollmeyer, 151 M 387, 443 P2d 873 (1968).

Application of Section:

Under this section an insolvent debtor may prefer one creditor to another; the preference may be made by conveyance of property, real or personal, either directly to the creditor or to a third person for the creditor's benefit, and, if made, the property is not subject to seizure under legal process. Costello v. Shields, 99 M 335, 43 P2d 879 (1935), followed in Pioneer Minerals Corp. v. Larabie Bros. Bankers, Inc., 99 M 358, 43 P2d 884 (1935).

The rule declared by this section and 31-2-207 that a debtor may pay one creditor in preference to another, provided that the other is not a preferred creditor, applies to an insolvent debtor as well as to a solvent one. Dept. of Agriculture, Labor and Industry v. DeVore, 91 M 47, 6 P2d 125 (1931); Hale v. Belgrade Co., Ltd., 75 M 99, 242 P 425 (1925).

If the provision of this section that a debtor may pay or secure one creditor in preference to another has any relation to cases of insolvency, it is limited by the rule stated in 31-2-207. Aetna Accident & Liab. Co. v. Miller, 54 M 377, 170 P 760 (1918).

Transfer of Property in Excess of Debt: When a debtor transfers to one creditor value greatly exceeding the amount due, it is a badge of fraud affording strong evidence thereof. Godfrey L. Cabot, Inc. v. Gas Prod. Co., 93 M 497, 19 P2d 878 (1933); Sec. St. Bank v. McIntyre, 71 M 186, 228 P 618 (1924).

Form of Preference Immaterial: In the absence of a positive statutory provision declaring otherwise, if a preference given by a debtor to his creditor is in other particulars unobjectionable, the form of the transaction by which it is made is immaterial. Dept. of Agriculture, Labor & Industry v. DeVore, 91 M 47, 6 P2d 125 (1931).

Transfers by Husband to Wife: An alleged fraudulent transfer of property by a husband to his wife should be closely scrutinized on account of the opportunities afforded by the relation, but a husband honestly indebted to his wife may give her a valid preference. Harrison v. Riddell, 64 M 466, 210 P 460 (1922).

Case Notes

Injustice Considered: A contractor was awarded a judgment for work performed in building a road. The supplier of equipment to the contractor filed a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) and the judgment debtors posted a bond in lieu of the supplier's lien. The District Court allowed the supplier to receive funds from the judgment fund pursuant to an assignment by the contractor rather than from the mechanics' lien (now construction lien) bond. The Supreme Court upheld this decision because otherwise the judgment debtors would have been required to make double payment for the use of the equipment, first to the contractor through the judgment fund and then to the supplier through the bond fund. Witbart v. Witbart, 204 M 446, 666 P2d 1217, 40 St. Rep. 995 (1983).

Case Notes

Montana Debtor May Claim Exemption for One Gun in Addition to Statutory Exemptions: On a certified question from the U.S. Bankruptcy Court, the Supreme Court held that the plain language of 25-13-613(1)(b) allows a Montana debtor to claim an exemption for one gun in addition to the exemption allowed and claimed for firearms, within monetary limits, allowed under 25-13-609(1). In re Maynard, 2006 MT 162, 332 M 485, 139 P3d 803 (2006), distinguishing Dept. of Revenue v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 179 M 255, 587 P2d 1282 (1978).

Joint Bankruptcy Debtors Allowed to Claim Separate Exemption of Interest in Jointly Owned Personal Property: Three married couples filed similar joint bankruptcy petitions wherein each spouse claimed a separate set of personal property exemptions pursuant to 25-13-609. The bankruptcy trustee objected to the claimed objections in each case, contending that joint debtors were limited to a single set of exemptions. The U.S. Bankruptcy Court certified the question to the Montana Supreme Court. The court held that the specific provisions of this section control over the general personal property exemptions available to judgment debtors in 25-13-609. This section allows each individual to claim the allowable exemptions in any bankruptcy proceeding. Because each joint debtor maintains an interest in jointly held personal property, each may claim a separate exemption of personal interest in that property, essentially stacking the two exemptions in one item of personal property. However, in cases when the personal property is owned solely by one of the joint debtors, only the debtor with the ownership interest may claim an exemption for that property. In re Zimmermann, Landon, & Maly, 2002 MT 90, 309 M 337, 46 P3d 599 (2002).

PERS Funds Not Exempt in Bankruptcy Proceeding: Accumulated contributions in the Montana Public Employees' Retirement System (PERS) account are not a spendthrift trust excluded from the estate under 11 U.S.C. 541 of the federal bankruptcy code. In re Anderson, 43 St. Rep. 1861 (1986) (U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the District of Montana). (Chapter 208, L. 1987, provided that property exempt from execution pursuant to 19-3-105 (renumbered 19-2-1004) may be exempt in a bankruptcy proceeding.)

Workers' Compensation — No Bankruptcy Exemption: Workers' compensation benefits are not exempt from federal bankruptcy. 42 St. Rep. 2043 (U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the District of Montana; order of Dec. 26, 1985). (Chapter 208, L. 1987, provided that property exempt from execution pursuant to 39-71-743 and 39-73-110 may be exempt in a bankruptcy proceeding.)

Effect of Section — Opt Out of Federal Exemptions: This section, authorized by the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, 11 U.S.C. 522(b)(1), opts Montana out of federal bankruptcy exemptions;

thus, whether a truck equipped with a mobile crane used to repair heavy equipment in the bankruptcy debtor's trade or business is exempt must be decided under Montana law. In re Gehnert, 40 St. Rep. 1894 (1983) (apparently not reported in Bankruptcy Reporter).

Assignments for Benefit of Creditors

Part Case Notes

Loans Repayable From Share of Judgment Award: Nyquist made seven loans to Preston, each of which was separately assigned by Preston to be repaid from his proceeds from a judgment award. Given the specific assignments, the District Court properly determined that the loans were to be repaid from Preston's individual share of the judgment award, rather than from the corporation's share of the award. Common-Law Assignment: A common-law assignment for the benefit of creditors is valid as to the assignor and consenting creditors, even though state insolvency laws have not been complied with. The assignment is void only as to any nonconsenting creditors, purchasers, and encumbrancers in good faith and for value. Galbraith v. Kline, 7 F2d 682 (1925).

Purpose of Statute: The provisions of this part merely regulate common-law assignments for the benefit of creditors. Babcock v. Maxwell, 21 M 507, 54 P 943 (1898).

Differentiation Between Composition and Assignment for Benefit of Creditors: The distinction between an assignment for the benefit of creditors and a composition with creditors is that the latter requires the assent of the creditors, while the former does not. Pioneer Minerals Corp. v. Larabie Bros. Bankers, 99 M 358, 43 P2d 884 (1935).

Suit Against Assignee:

Under this part, whereby a complete procedure for the administration and settlement of estates assigned for the benefit of creditors is provided, the District Court of the county in which an assignment is made has exclusive jurisdiction, both in cases at law and in equity, arising out of the assignment and relating to the distribution of the assets of the estate. Stanton Trust & Sav. Bank v. N. Mont. Ass'n of Credit Men, 77 M 153, 250 P 596 (1926). See also Patrick & Co. v. McDonnell, 61 M 236, 201 P 1009 (1921).

One who has been appointed by the court the successor of an assignee of an insolvent may be sued without leave of court. Babcock v. Maxwell, 21 M 507, 54 P 943 (1898).

Common-Law Rule Still Exists: The rule of common law still exists under this section and 31-2-202 through 31-2-220 to the effect that the execution of an assignment for the benefit of creditors is no bar to an action by a creditor against the assignor, and does not affect the right of the creditor to proceed to judgment after the assignment is made. Acme Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Benedict, 58 M 110, 190 P 287 (1920).

Assignee Not a Receiver: Neither an original assignee nor his successor, as such, is a receiver. Babcock v. Maxwell, 21 M 507, 54 P 943 (1898). See Aetna Accident & Liab. Co. v. Miller, 54 M 377, 170 P 760 (1918).

Two Meanings of Insolvency: "Insolvency" has two meanings. In its proper sense, it signifies that condition of a person whose entire assets are insufficient to pay his debts in full. In a restricted sense, the term is used to express the present inability of one to pay his current obligations as they mature, in the usual course of business. It is in this latter sense that the term is used when applied to banks. Stadler v. First Nat'l Bank, 22 M 190, 56 P 111 (1899).

Application of Section:

This section deals with insolvency proceedings and into them injects an automatic preference in favor of wage claims to an amount not exceeding $200 each (restriction deleted by amendment). At most this could amount to nothing more than an assent by the State to share its preference in such cases with such claims. Aetna Accident & Liab. Co. v. Miller, 54 M 377, 170 P 760 (1918).

When there is no evidence in the record and the findings of the court bring the plaintiff within the operation of this section, a judgment for plaintiff against an assignee for the benefit of creditors will be affirmed on the authority of Flanders v. Murphy, 10 M 398, 25 P 1052 (1891), and Marshall v. Livingston Nat'l Bank, 11 M 351, 28 P 312 (1891). Knatz v. Wise, 16 M 555, 41 P 710 (1895).

Assignment to Creditor for His Sole Benefit: It is no objection to a complaint in an action by a laborer to enforce his claim that it alleges an assignment to a creditor directly for his sole benefit, and not as a trustee or for the benefit of creditors. Marshall v. Livingston Nat'l Bank, 11 M 351, 28 P 312 (1891); Flanders v. Murphy, 10 M 398, 25 P 1052 (1891).

Chattel Mortgage as Assignment: The effect of an instrument conveying personal property was a transfer of a debtor's property to a creditor, with power to make an immediate sale of the same and render the surplusage, after satisfying the debt therein described, to the debtor, which debt was made to be due at once. The transaction, though under the name and in the form of a chattel mortgage, will be regarded as an assignment, and within the operation of a statute making the wages of an employee of the assignor a preferred claim when the services were rendered within 60 days (now 4 months) immediately preceding such assignment. Marshall v. Livingston Nat'l Bank, 11 M 351, 28 P 312 (1891).

31-2-207. Certain rights not affected by preferences in assignment.

Tax Collections: The state is not bound by the general language of a statute which tends to restrain or to diminish its powers, rights, or interest. Its right to a preference claim on a fund collected as taxes and held by a bank cannot, as against general creditors of the bank, be defeated. Aetna Accident & Liab. Co. v. Part 3
Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act

Part Commissioners' Prefatory Note

The Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act was promulgated by the Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in 1918. The Act has been adopted in 25 jurisdictions, including the Virgin Islands. It has also been adopted in the sections of the Bankruptcy Act of 1938 and the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978 that deal with fraudulent transfers and obligations.

The Uniform Act was a codification of the "better" decisions applying the Statute of 13 Elizabeth. See Analysis of H.R. 12339, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. 213 (1936). The English statute was enacted in some form in many states, but, whether or not so enacted, the voidability of fraudulent transfer was part of the law of every American jurisdiction. Since the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors is seldom susceptible of direct proof, courts have relied on badges of fraud. The weight given these badges varied greatly from jurisdiction, and the Conference sought to minimize or eliminate the diversity by providing that proof of certain fact combinations would conclusively establish fraud. In the absence of evidence of the existence of such facts, proof of a fraudulent transfer was to depend on the evidence of actual intent. An important reform effected by the Uniform Act was the elimination of any requirement that a creditor have obtained a judgment or execution returned unsatisfied before bringing an action to avoid a transfer as fraudulent. See American Surety Co. v. Conner, 251 N.Y. 1, 166 N.E. 783, 67 A.L.R. 244 (1929) (per C.J. Cardozo).

The Conference was persuaded in 1979 to appoint a committee to undertake a study of the Uniform Act with a view to preparing the draft of a revision. The Conference was influenced by the following considerations:

(1) The Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978 has made numerous changes in the section of that Act dealing with fraudulent transfers and obligations, thereby substantially reducing the correspondence of the provisions of the federal bankruptcy law on fraudulent transfers with the Uniform Act.

(2) The Committee on Corporate Laws of the Section of Corporations, Banking & Business Law of the American Bar Association, engaged in revising the Model Corporation Act, suggested that the Conference review provisions of the Uniform Act with a view to determining whether the Acts are consistent in respect to the treatment of dividend distributions.

(3) The Uniform Commercial Code, enacted at least in part by all 50 states, had substantially modified related rules of law regulating transfers of personal property, notably by facilitating the making and perfection of security transfers against attack by unsecured creditors.

(4) Debtors and trustees in a number of cases have avoided foreclosure of security interests by invoking the fraudulent transfer section of the Bankruptcy Reform Act.

(5) The Model Rules of Professional Conduct adopted by the House of Delegates of the American Bar Association on August 2, 1983, forbid a lawyer to counsel or to assist a client in conduct that the lawyer knows is fraudulent.

The Drafting Committee appointed by the Conference held its first meeting in January of 1983. A first reading of a draft of the revision of the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act was had at the Conference's meeting in Boca Raton, Florida, on July 27, 1983. The Committee held four meetings in addition to a meeting held in connection with the Conference meeting in Boca Raton. Meetings were also attended by the following representatives of interested organizations:

Robert Rosenberg, Esq., of the American Bar Association;

Richard Cherin, Esq., of the Commercial Financial Services Committee of the Corporation, Banking and Business Law Section of the American Bar Association;

Robert Zinman, Esq., of the American College of Real Estate Lawyers;

Bruce Bernstein, Esq., of the National Commercial Finance Association;

Ernest E. Specks, Esq., of the Real Property, Probate and Trust Law Section of the American Bar Association.

The Committee determined to rename the Act the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act in recognition of its applicability to transfers of personal property as well as real property, "conveyance" having a connotation restricting it to a transfer of personal property. As noted in Comment (2) accompanying §1(2) [31-2-328(2)] and Comment (8) accompanying §4 [31-2-333], however, this Act, like the original Uniform Act, does not purport to cover the whole law of voidable transfers and obligations. The limited scope of the original Act did not impair its effectiveness in achieving uniformity in the areas covered. See McLaughlin, Application of the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act, 46 Harv.L.Rev. 404, 405 (1933).

The basic structure and approach of the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act are preserved in the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act. There are two section in the new Act delineating what transfers and obligations are fraudulent. Section 4(a) [31-2-333(1)] is an adaptation of three sections of the U.F.C.A.; §5(a) [31-2-334(1)] is an adaptation of another section of the U.F.C.A.; and §5(b) [31-2-334(2)] is new. One section of the U.F.C.A. (§8) [31-2-317, now repealed] is not carried forward into the new Act because deemed to be redundant in part and in part susceptible of inequitable application. Both Acts declare a transfer made or an obligation incurred with actual intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors to be fraudulent. Both Acts render a transfer made or obligation incurred without adequate consideration to be constructively fraudulent—i.e., without regard to the actual intent of the parties—under one of the following conditions:

(1) the debtor was left by the transfer or obligation with unreasonably small assets for a transaction or the business in which he was engaged;

(2) the debtor intended to incur, or believed that he would incur, more debts than he would be able to pay; or

(3) the debtor was insolvent at the time or as a result of the transfer or obligation.

As under the original Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act a transfer or obligation that is constructively fraudulent because insolvency concurs with or follows failure to receive adequate consideration is voidable only by a creditor in existence at the time the transfer occurs or the obligation is incurred. Either an existing or subsequent creditor may avoid a transfer or obligation for inadequate consideration when accompanied by the financial condition specified in §4(a)(2)(i) [31-2-333(1)(a)(i)] or the mental state specified in §4(a)(2)(ii) [31-2-333(1)(a)(ii)].

Reasonably equivalent value is required in order to constitute adequate consideration under the revised Act. The revision follows the Bankruptcy Code in eliminating good faith on the part of the transferee or obligee as an issue in the determination of whether adequate consideration is given by a transferee or obligee. The new Act, like the Bankruptcy Act, allows the transferee or obligee to show good faith in defense after a creditor establishes that a fraudulent transfer has been made or a fraudulent obligation has been incurred. Thus a showing by a defendant that a reasonable equivalent has been has been given in good faith for a transfer or obligation is a complete defense although the debtor is shown to have intended to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors.

A good faith transferee or obligee who has given less than a reasonable equivalent is nevertheless allowed a reduction in a liability to the extent of the value given. The new Act, like the Bankruptcy Code, eliminates the provision of the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act that enables a creditor to attack a security transfer on the ground that the value of the property transferred is disproportionate to the debt secured. The premise of the new Act is that the value of the interest transferred for security is measured by and thus corresponds exactly to the debt secured. Foreclosure of a debtor's interest by a regularly conducted, noncollusive sale on default under a mortgage or other security agreement may not be avoided under the Act as a transfer for less than a reasonably equivalent value.

The definition of insolvency under the Act is adapted from the definition of the term in the Bankruptcy Code. Insolvency is presumed from proof of a failure generally to pay debts as they become due.

The new Act adds a new category of fraudulent transfer, namely, a preferential transfer by an insolvent insider to a creditor who had reasonable cause to believe the debtor to be insolvent. An insider is defined in much the same way as in the Bankruptcy Code and includes a relative, also defined as in the Bankruptcy Code, a director or officer of a corporate debtor, a partner, or a person in control of a debtor. This provision is available only to an existing creditor. Its premise is that an insolvent debtor is obliged to pay debts to creditors not related to him before paying those who are insiders.

The new Act omits any provision directed particularly at transfers or obligations of insolvent partnership debtors. Under §8 [31-2-317, now repealed] of the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act any transfer made or obligation incurred by an insolvent partnership to a partner is fraudulent without regard to intent or adequacy of consideration. So categorical a condemnation of a partnership transaction with a partner may unfairly prejudice the interests of a partner's separate creditors. The new Act also omits as redundant a provision in the original Act that makes fraudulent a transfer made or obligation incurred by an insolvent partnership for less than a fair consideration to the partnership.

Section 7 [31-2-339] lists the remedies available to creditors under the new Act. It eliminates as unnecessary and confusing a differentiation made in the original Act between the remedies available to holders of matured claims and those holding unmatured claims. Since promulgation of the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act the Supreme Court has imposed restrictions on the availability and use of prejudgment remedies. As a result many states have amended their statutes and rules applicable to such remedies, and it is frequently unclear whether a state's procedures include a prejudgment remedy against a fraudulent transfer or obligation. A bracketed paragraph is included in Section 7 [31-2-339] for adoption by those states that elect to make such a remedy available.

Section 8 [31-2-340] prescribes the measure of liability of a transferee or obligee under the Act and enumerates defenses. Defenses against avoidance of a preferential transfer to an insider under §5(b) [31-2-334(2)] include an adaptation of defenses available under §547(c)(2) and (4) of the Bankruptcy Code when such a transfer is sought to be avoided as a preference by the trustee in bankruptcy. In addition a preferential transfer may be justified when shown to be made pursuant to a good faith effort to stave off forced liquidation and rehabilitate the debtor. Section 8 [31-2-340] also precludes avoidance, as a constructively fraudulent transfer, of the termination of a lease on default or the enforcement of a security interest in compliance with Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code [Title 30, chapter 9A].

The new Act includes a new section specifying when a transfer is made or an obligation is incurred. The section specifying the time when a transfer occurs is adapted from Section 548(d) of the Bankruptcy Code. Its premise is that if the law prescribes a mode for making the transfer a matter of public record or notice, it is not deemed to be made for any purpose under the Act until it has become such a matter of record or notice.

The new Act also includes a statute of limitations that bars the right rather than the remedy on expiration of the statutory periods prescribed. The law governing limitations on actions to avoid fraudulent transfers among the states is unclear and full of diversity. The Act recognizes that laches and estoppel may operate to preclude a particular creditor from pursuing a remedy against a fraudulent transfer or obligation even though the statutory period of limitations has not run.

Part Case Notes

DECISIONS AFTER 1991 ENACTMENT OF
UNIFORM FRAUDULENT TRANSFER ACT

Inadvertent Use of Previous Cause Number on New Complaint Considered Technical, Nonprejudicial Defect: One day before expiration of the statute of limitations, the Lundquists filed a pro se complaint against Shook, Hamilton, and McBeth for fraudulent transfer of property, but in preparing the complaint, the Lundquists used a template from a prior fraudulent transfer case involving Shook, Hamilton, and Pederson and included the same cause number from the prior case. The Lundquists' former counsel notified the District Court that he was not representing the Lundquists in the case involving McBeth. One day prior to service of process on McBeth, the District Court ordered the Clerk of the District Court to withdraw the Lundquists' complaint on grounds that the complaint was filed in the same cause of action previously pending, and the Lundquists did not obtain the court's consent to amend prior pleadings and have their attorney of record sign the complaint against McBeth. The Lundquists then moved to have the court assign a new cause number to the complaint and allow amendment of the complaint to retain the original filing date. The court denied the motion, holding that if a new complaint was to be filed and a new cause number assigned, it would be considered filed as of the date on which it was presented for filing and not the date on which it was originally attempted to be filed. Thus, a new complaint was filed with a new cause number and filing date, but the new complaint was filed after expiration of the statute of limitations for fraudulent conveyance actions, so the District Court granted McBeth's dismissal motion because the complaint was not timely filed. The Lundquists appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. In filing the new complaint, the Lundquists had notified the court that they intended to proceed against McBeth in an action that was independent of the transfer litigated in the previous cause, and their use of the cause number from the previous action was inadvertent and a technical rather than fundamental defect. The Lundquists did not need the District Court's permission to file a new complaint, nor did the new pro se complaint require their attorney's signature. Because the Lundquists named McBeth in the complaint, filed the complaint prior to the expiration of the fraudulent transfer statute of limitations, and served McBeth with a copy of the complaint, McBeth was not prejudiced by the technical defect and the District Court should not have ordered the complaint withdrawn. Lundquist v. McBeth, 2001 MT 311, 308 M 1, 38 P3d 831 (2001).

Supreme Court Indicates Clean Hands Doctrine Not Part of Balancing Test of Weighing Unjust Enrichment Against Relief to One Attempting to Avoid Child Support: Fifer argued that the lower court was correct in awarding him certain real property under the theory of resulting trust because although he had placed the property in Neset's name to avoid child support obligations, she knew of his intent and therefore did not have clean hands. The Supreme Court indicated that on remand if the lower court decided that a resulting trust existed, it should not consider whether or not Neset had clean hands in using the statutorily required balancing test of weighing unjust enrichment to Neset by awarding her the property that was purportedly paid for by Fifer. If, after resolving fact issues, the lower court determined that a purchase money resulting trust was created, it was to weigh the proper factors in determining if the exception in 72-33-218 (now repealed) applied. Neset v. Fifer, 283 M 527, 942 P2d 712, 54 St. Rep. 777 (1997).

Finding of Fraudulent Conveyance Upheld — Law of the Case Doctrine Inapplicable: Murphys brought an action against Lewis for fraud in the sale of real property. Lewis raised the defense that he had previously been sued in a different action in which the District Court found that the conveyance of the ranch property in question was not a fraudulent conveyance and therefore that holding constituted the law of the case and was binding in subsequent legal actions. Citing St. v. Burlingame, 185 M 183, 605 P2d 176 (1980), the Supreme Court held that the law of the case doctrine applies only when the same parties and the same case are involved. Here, the Murphys were not parties to the previous litigation, nor is the case the same. The Supreme Court held that the law of the case doctrine was therefore inapplicable. Murphy v. Atkinson, 262 M 164, 864 P2d 273, 50 St. Rep. 1495 (1993).

DECISIONS PRIOR TO 1991 ENACTMENT OF UNIFORM FRAUDULENT TRANSFER ACT

Finding of Fraudulent Conveyance Rather Than Payment in Preference Affirmed: Plaintiffs who leased mineral rights to a peat extraction operation from Foss obtained a $118,343.59 default judgment against Foss for intentional interference with access to the peat resources and for assault on one of the plaintiffs with a rifle. Foss conveyed his 44% interest in the property to his then-wife Fedder for $1, which gave her an 88% interest, and Foss's children from a previous marriage held the remaining 12% interest. Their marriage was subsequently dissolved. The District Court held that the property conveyance was fraudulent and allowed plaintiffs to levy execution upon the property. Fedder maintained on appeal that the transfer of title to her was in effect a payment in preference, allowable under 31-2-104, that was made in recognition that she would be entitled to maintenance or support from Foss when they dissolved their marriage. However, Fedder produced no evidence that she was a creditor of Foss at the time of the conveyance. The marriage was intact at the time of the conveyance, and the property transfer was not part of the dissolution, but rather preceded it. The District Court's decision was affirmed. Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Fedder, 2000 MT 87, 299 M 206, 999 P2d 315, 57 St. Rep. 375 (2000).

Prosecution of Fraudulent Conveyance Action After Filing of Bankruptcy Petition Proper: Plaintiffs who leased mineral rights to a peat extraction operation from Foss obtained a $118,343.59 default judgment against Foss for intentional interference with access to the peat resources and for assault on one of the plaintiffs with a rifle in 1989. Foss transferred his 44% interest in the property to his then-wife Fedder for $1, which gave her an 88% interest, and Foss's children from a previous marriage held the remaining 12% interest. The marriage was subsequently dissolved, and Foss filed a bankruptcy petition in 1994, listing numerous creditors and no assets. Foss was dropped as a defendant, and plaintiffs pursued a fraudulent conveyance action against Fedder to collect on their judgment. The District Court voided the conveyance from Foss to Fedder, and granted defendants the right to levy execution upon the property. Fedder appealed, asserting that when Foss filed the bankruptcy petition, the bankruptcy trustee acquired the right to avoid prepetition fraudulent conveyances and that plaintiffs thus lost their standing to pursue their claim. The Supreme Court noted that section 524(e) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that discharge of a debt does not affect the liability of any other entity for the debt. After the close of a bankruptcy, creditors are free to resume or commence a fraudulent conveyance action against the transferee in state court independent of the bankruptcy trustee, even when collection efforts may have occurred during pendency of the bankruptcy. Here, the trustee was appointed after this action was filed, and the Bankruptcy Court and the trustee had notice of the action during pendency of the bankruptcy, so the District Court did not err in granting the fraudulent conveyance judgment after conclusion of the bankruptcy proceedings. Further, pursuant to Cahill-Mooney Constr. Co. v. Ayres, 140 M 464, 373 P2d 703 (1962), plaintiffs were not required to obtain a lien prior to bringing the fraudulent conveyance claim. Nothing mandates that a plaintiff file a proof of claim in Bankruptcy Court to preserve the right to pursue a fraudulent conveyance action against a third party transferee like Fedder. Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Fedder, 2000 MT 87, 299 M 206, 999 P2d 315, 57 St. Rep. 375 (2000). See also Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Davis, 733 F2d 1083 (4th Cir. 1984), and Kathy B. Enterprises, Inc. v. U.S., 779 F2d 1413 (9th Cir. 1986).

Requirements of Complaint: A judgment creditor sought to set aside a conveyance by an insolvent debtor to his wife on the ground that it had been made with the intent to defraud creditors. The court held that the complaint must allege that the plaintiff had secured a lien on the property by issuance and return of execution unsatisfied. N. Mont. St. Bank v. Collins, 67 M 575, 216 P 330 (1923).

Homestead Property Not Asset Subject to Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act: Gribble took out at least four loans with the credit union and defaulted on most if not all of them. The loans were secured with large equipment, not real property. The credit union filed a complaint seeking repayment and the right to foreclose on the collateral. Gribble transferred his residential real property to another party by quitclaim deed 11 days later. The credit union asked the District Court to set aside the transfer under the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act (UFTA), but instead the court granted summary judgment to defendant, and the credit union appealed. The Supreme Court held that because the real property was Gribble's residence, it qualified as a homestead that would generally be exempt under nonbankruptcy law and thus was not an asset for purposes of the UFTA. The District Court was affirmed. McCone County Fed. Credit Union v. Gribble, 2009 MT 290, 352 M 254, 216 P3d 206 (2009).

The loans were secured with large equipment, not real property. The credit union filed a complaint seeking repayment and the right to foreclose on the collateral. Gribble transferred his residential real property to another party by quitclaim deed 11 days later. The credit union asked the District Court to set aside the transfer under the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act (UFTA), but instead the court granted summary judgment to defendant, and the credit union appealed. The Supreme Court held that because the real property was Gribble's residence, it qualified as a homestead that would generally be exempt under nonbankruptcy law and thus was not an asset for purposes of the UFTA. The District Court was affirmed. McCone County Fed. Credit Union v. Gribble, 2009 MT 290, 352 M 254, 216 P3d 206 (2009).

DECISIONS PRIOR TO 1991 ENACTMENT OF UNIFORM FRAUDULENT TRANSFER ACT

Insolvency as Matter of Law: Debtor was insolvent as a matter of law at the time he conveyed his ranch property to his children where his total liabilities exceeded his total assets by over $7,000, including in that computation an $11,000 debt to the Federal Land Bank on which debtor remained principal debtor despite a purported assumption of the obligation by his son. Baker Nat'l Bank v. Lestar, 153 M 45, 453 P2d 774 (1969).

Insolvency at Time of Transfer Not Required: In an action in claim and delivery by the purchaser of a band of horses seized by a trustee in bankruptcy, it was immaterial that it was not shown that vendor was in debt at the time of the alleged sale. As against his creditors or the trustee in bankruptcy, the sale was void under 31-2-315 (now repealed). Anderson v. Hoffman, 99 M 146, 43 P2d 644 (1935).

Insolvency Required for Avoidance: Under 31-2-323 (now repealed), section 29-207, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), and 31-2-316 (now repealed), a creditor seeking to set aside a transfer as fraudulent must allege and prove that the debtor was insolvent at the time he made the conveyance and that he had no other property out of which his claim could be satisfied or enforced by legal process. Ferrell v. Elling, 84 M 384, 276 P 432 (1929); Hale v. Belgrade Co., Ltd., 75 M 99, 242 P 425 (1925).

Return of Execution Unsatisfied: The return of an execution unsatisfied is sufficient proof of the exhaustion of a creditor's legal remedy. The return establishes prima facie the insolvency of the debtor, and that he has no other property out of which the execution could be made. The execution creditor is entitled to maintain a suit to set aside such conveyances as fraudulent to his rights. Hart-Parr Co. v. Schafer, 73 M 429, 236 P 675 (1925).

Adequate Consideration: In a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, where the disparity between value received and obligations assumed is so great that the trial court would and should have made the same decision, failure to make a specific finding of value of the property as of the date of the transfer is not reversible error. Mont. Ass'n of Credit Management v. Hergert, 181 M 442, 593 P2d 1059 (1979), followed in Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Fedder, 2000 MT 87, 299 M 206, 999 P2d 315, 57 St. Rep. 375 (2000).

OF UNIFORM FRAUDULENT TRANSFER ACT

Favoritism Between Legitimate, Unprioritized Creditors — No Fraudulent Transfer: A debtor owed money to the plaintiff. The debtor later received money from a third party that he used to purchase real property. Then, while the debtor was insolvent, he repaid the third party by transferring the property to the third party. The plaintiff claimed the transfer was fraudulent and the District Court agreed. On appeal, the third party argued that the facts did not support the finding that the parcel was fraudulently transferred but rather indicated a legitimate repayment of a loan. The Supreme Court agreed that the plaintiff had not proved the third party was an insider or that the transfer was without receipt of a reasonable equivalent value in exchange for the transfer. The Supreme Court reversed, declaring that a show of favoritism between legitimate, unprioritized creditors does not, by itself, constitute a fraudulent transfer. Larson Lumber Co., Inc. v. Bilt Rite Constr. & Landscaping, LLC, 2014 MT 61, 374 Mont. 167, 320 P.3d 471.

Failure to File Suit Within Statutory Limits Precluding Action Under Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act: Plaintiff insurers brought an action in 1995 in California federal District Court demanding reimbursement for their performance pursuant to indemnity bond agreements concerning government construction contracts that Clark and other defendants breached. Plaintiffs were awarded default money judgments in 1997 after defendants failed to appear. However, shortly after the action was filed in 1995, Clark recorded five deeds conveying tracts of Montana real property from himself to his corporation. Plaintiffs alleged that the transfers were made with the actual intent to prevent plaintiffs from executing judgment against Clark individually, so in 1999, within 2 years after the federal judgment was entered in their favor, plaintiffs filed a complaint in state District Court in Montana seeking to have Clark's alleged fraudulent conveyances declared void under the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act. Clark moved for summary judgment on grounds that the statute of limitations in 31-2-341 extinguished the fraudulent transfer claim, and the motion was granted under the rationale that a cause of action with respect to a fraudulent transfer must be brought either within 2 years of the transfer itself or within 1 year of the reasonable discovery of the transfer by the claimant. Numerous affidavits indicated that plaintiffs were aware that Clark resided in Montana when the original indemnity agreements were entered in 1993 and had used private investigators in 1995 and 1996 to collect information on Clark's whereabouts so that the default judgment could be entered. The District Court found that plaintiffs had missed the deadline requiring filing of a claim within 2 years of transfer and that the deeds could have reasonably been discovered at any time following the date of recording. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. In this case, the claim that Clark transferred the assets with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud was afforded the more lenient statute of limitations under 31-2-341(1), so plaintiffs had 2 years after the transfers were made or 1 year after the transfers were discovered or could reasonably have been discovered to file suit. The District Court did not err in concluding that plaintiffs could have reasonably discovered the deed transfers any time after the date of recording. Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2001 MT 45, 304 M 264, 20 P3d 780 (2001).

Statute of Limitations Under Repealed Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act Displaced by Explicit Statute of Limitations in Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act: Plaintiff insurers argued that a creditor may not assert a claim under the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act (UFTA) until after the underlying judgment is entered, citing Murphy v. Atkinson, 262 M 164, 864 P2d 273 (1993). Plaintiffs were correct to the extent that prior to the adoption of UFTA in 1991, the statute of limitations for fraudulent transfers under the now repealed Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act was supplied by the general rule for fraud under 27-2-203. However, after adoption of UFTA, Murphy, in conjunction with 27-2-203, was no longer the rule of law, but rather the statute of limitations in 31-2-341 applied and provided that a judgment in hand is no longer a prerequisite for establishing standing to bring a UFTA claim. Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2001 MT 45, 304 M 264, 20 P3d 780 (2001).

When Statute of Limitations Affecting Liability for Claim Arising Before Transfer Occurs: Generally, the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act (UFTA) addresses transfers of property that have already occurred; however, 31-2-334 and this section may establish the liability of a debtor as to a creditor whose claim arose before the transfer occurred, as in this case, if: (1) the debtor made the transfer with actual intent to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor; (2) the debtor made the transfer without receiving a reasonably equivalent value in exchange for the transfer and the debtor was engaged or about to engage in a business or transaction for which the remaining assets of the debtor were unreasonably small in relation to the business or transaction or intended to incur or believed or reasonably should have believed that debts would be incurred beyond the ability to pay as they became due; (3) the debtor made the transfer without receiving a reasonably equivalent value in exchange for the transfer and the debtor became insolvent as a result of the transfer; or (4) the transfer was made to an insider for an antecedent debt, the debtor was insolvent at the time, and the insider had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent. These actions are subject to the explicit statute of limitations under 31-2-341, and the burden of establishing facts necessary to bar a claim under UFTA rests with the debtor. Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2001 MT 45, 304 M 264, 20 P3d 780 (2001).

DECISIONS PRIOR TO 1991 ENACTMENT OF UNIFORM FRAUDULENT TRANSFER ACT

Prosecution of Fraudulent Conveyance Action After Filing of Bankruptcy Petition Proper: Plaintiffs who leased mineral rights to a peat extraction operation from Foss obtained a $118,343.59 default judgment against Foss for intentional interference with access to the peat resources and for assault on one of the plaintiffs with a rifle in 1989. Foss transferred his 44% interest in the property to his then-wife Fedder for $1, which gave her an 88% interest, and Foss's children from a previous marriage held the remaining 12% interest. The marriage was subsequently dissolved, and Foss filed a bankruptcy petition in 1994, listing numerous creditors and no assets. Foss was dropped as a defendant, and plaintiffs pursued a fraudulent conveyance action against Fedder to collect on their judgment. The District Court voided the conveyance from Foss to Fedder, and granted defendants the right to levy execution upon the property. Fedder appealed, asserting that when Foss filed the bankruptcy petition, the bankruptcy trustee acquired the right to avoid prepetition fraudulent conveyances and that plaintiffs thus lost their standing to pursue their claim. The Supreme Court noted that section 524(e) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that discharge of a debt does not affect the liability of any other entity for the debt. After the close of a bankruptcy, creditors are free to resume or commence a fraudulent conveyance action against the transferee in state court independent of the bankruptcy trustee, even when collection efforts may have occurred during pendency of the bankruptcy. Here, the trustee was appointed after this action was filed, and the Bankruptcy Court and the trustee had notice of the action during pendency of the bankruptcy, so the District Court did not err in granting the fraudulent conveyance judgment after conclusion of the bankruptcy proceedings. Further, pursuant to Cahill-Mooney Constr. Co. v. Ayres, 140 M 464, 373 P2d 703 (1962), plaintiffs were not required to obtain a lien prior to bringing the fraudulent conveyance claim. Nothing mandates that a plaintiff file a proof of claim in Bankruptcy Court to preserve the right to pursue a fraudulent conveyance action against a third party transferee like Fedder. Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Fedder, 2000 MT 87, 299 M 206, 999 P2d 315, 57 St. Rep. 375 (2000). See also Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Davis, 733 F2d 1083 (4th Cir. 1984), and Kathy B. Enterprises, Inc. v. U.S., 779 F2d 1413 (9th Cir. 1986).

Lack of Sufficient Evidence — Finding of Fraud Reversed: The defendant and his wife purchased property secured by a trust indenture. Unable to obtain financing because of the plaintiff's prior judgment, the defendant quitclaimed the property back to the sellers. Shortly thereafter, the defendant's wife's stepfather purchased the property and deeded it to the defendant's wife. The property was eventually sold to a third party. The plaintiff sued to attach the proceeds from the sale by the wife. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in determining that the series of conveyances were fraudulent under the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act (now repealed). The plaintiff failed to meet the burden of proving that the transactions were fraudulent. The District Court's findings that the series of transactions were fraudulent were clearly erroneous. Jones v. Arnold, 272 M 317, 900 P2d 917, 52 St. Rep. 779 (1995). See also Larson Lumber Co., Inc. v. Bilt Rite Constr. & Landscaping, LLC, 2014 MT 61, 374 Mont. 167, 320 P.3d 471.

Husband's Transfer of Property to Wife Found Fraudulent: Anderson was a partner in a business enterprise that owed substantial back taxes and that faced imminent balloon payments at the time that he conveyed his interest in real and personal property to his wife. McDonald, one of Anderson's partners, paid Anderson's share of the business's obligation and subsequently sued Anderson to recover the money that he had advanced on Anderson's behalf and asked the court to set aside the conveyance of property by Anderson to his wife as fraudulent. Anderson testified that each month he gifted his retirement checks to his wife and she in return, as a gift to him, paid his living expenses. The Supreme Court held that the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act was the law in effect in 1986 when the property was transferred and was the appropriate law to apply to the case. The Supreme Court held that the conveyance was fraudulent as to present and future creditors because Anderson retained control of the property. McDonald v. Anderson, 261 M 268, 862 P2d 402, 50 St. Rep. 1317 (1993).

Real Estate Conveyance — No Fraud — Purchasers Presented With Copy of Covenants: The plaintiffs sued to recover damages from the defendants on the basis that after they purchased property from the defendants, they learned that restrictive covenants prohibited the operation of a business on the property. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiffs should have known of the covenants because they were presented with the title report and a summary that described the restrictions in clear language. Pare v. Morrison, 241 M 218, 786 P2d 655, 47 St. Rep. 222 (1990).

Transfer Not Fraudulent — No Intent to Defraud Creditors: Plaintiff purchased a ranch on behalf of defendant with defendant's money but put title to the ranch in plaintiff's name and operated the ranch for defendant. The parties subsequently executed documents to settle the dispute between them concerning the ranch property. Plaintiff executed a quitclaim deed of the property to defendant, and defendant promised to pay plaintiff for operating the ranch. Defendant then transferred the property to his wife. He did not pay plaintiff the complete amount he had promised. The record does not support plaintiff's argument that the transfer by defendant to his wife was made to defraud plaintiff as a creditor of defendant or to render defendant insolvent. O'Connor v. Lewis, 238 M 270, 776 P2d 1228, 46 St. Rep. 1260 (1989).

Indicators of Fraudulent Intent — Finding of Fraud Affirmed: In an action to set aside two conveyances of real property as a fraud by the defendant upon the plaintiff creditor, the trial court correctly found that in each case the defendant intended to defraud the plaintiff and correctly set them aside as fraudulent conveyances. Generally recognized signs of fraud are lack of consideration, transfer of the debtor's entire estate, the relationship between the transferor and the transferee, the threat of litigation, insolvency of the transferor, departure from the usual method of business, and a retention of possession for the benefit of the transferor. Because the record showed that many of these indicators of fraud were present, the judgment of the District Court was affirmed. Mont. Nat'l Bank v. Michels, 193 M 295, 631 P2d 1260, 38 St. Rep. 334 (1981), followed in O'Connor v. Lewis, 230 M 270, 776 P2d 1228, 46 St. Rep. 1260 (1989), and distinguished in Jones v. Arnold, 272 M 317, 900 P2d 917, 52 St. Rep. 779 (1995).

Creation of Joint Bank Account: Creation of a joint bank account 11 years before the death of the decedent was not a fraudulent conveyance. Casa Grande v. Donahue, 178 M 479, 585 P2d 1286 (1978), followed in Vogele v. Estate of Schock, 229 M 259, 745 P2d 1138, 44 St. Rep. 1950 (1987).

Sufficiency of Evidence: Finding of District Court that transferor of property had no intent to defraud creditors was supported by the following substantial evidence: a substantial cash payment to transferor; application of entire proceeds to transferor's debts; lack of secrecy in transaction; application of wife's interest in part of property transferred to husband's debts; sale of fractional interest in mother's estate to brother also holding fractional interest therein, who presumably would be willing to pay more than stranger; and apparent existence of sufficient remaining assets with which to discharge transferor's remaining indebtedness. White v. Nollmeyer, 151 M 387, 443 P2d 873 (1968).

Transfer of Mares: When an alleged transfer of mares to plaintiff in exchange for other animals was not accompanied by immediate delivery and was not followed by actual and continued change of possession, the transfer was conclusively presumed to be fraudulent and void as against holders in good faith of subsequently executed notes and chattel mortgage and against the Sheriff acting at direction of holders and pursuant to terms of mortgage. Reagan v. Armstrong, 118 M 273, 165 P2d 1004 (1946).

"Badges of Fraud": "Badges of fraud", as applied to fraudulent conveyances, are facts which throw suspicion on a transaction. They are signs of fraud which, though not sufficient to constitute fraud, have a tendency to show its existence. Types of signs are: a fictitious consideration, a transfer in anticipation of a suit, an excessive effort to conceal the real nature of the transfer, retention of possession of the property transferred, or reservation of a trust to the use of the transferor. Where several of such badges are found in the same transaction, strong and clear evidence is required to repel the conclusion of fraudulent intent. Humbird v. Arnet, 99 M 499, 44 P2d 756 (1935).

Use of Closely Held Corporation: The maker of a promissory note, after the due date of the note, transferred a two-fifths interest in personal property to his wife. A few days after service of summons in the action on the note, he organized a corporation with the aid of his wife and an employee. The bulk of the capital stock was held by the maker's wife and father, the latter being ignorant of the formation of the company and who paid nothing for the stock. The defendant then turned over all his remaining property to the corporation. These facts warranted a finding that the transfers were fraudulent. Edenfield v. Seal Co., Inc., 83 M 49, 270 P 642 (1928).

Close Relationship of Parties: A near relationship between the parties to a conveyance is not of itself a badge of fraud, but will subject the transaction to close scrutiny. Here, the husband transferred realty to his wife for the consideration of $1 and the evidence merely showed that the grantor was indebted to plaintiff 4 years after the transfer. Plaintiff sought to establish the value of the property by the testimony of the assessor, which was vague and indefinite, but did show that grantor had other property at the time of the transfer. Defendant was not required to assume the burden of showing good faith or adequacy of consideration, and dismissal was proper. Dick v. King, 80 M 40, 257 P 1022 (1927). See also Koopman v. Mansolf, 51 M 48, 149 P 491 (1915).

Retention of Power of Attorney: The owner of property worth $67,500 transferred it to his sister for the consideration of $1. The sister then gave him a power of attorney under which he practically had the same control over it as he had before the transfer. The trial court erred in holding that plaintiff had not made out a prima facie case of fraudulent conveyance. Hart-Parr Co. v. Schafer, 73 M 429, 236 P 675 (1925).

Enterprises, Inc. v. U.S., 779 F2d 1413 (9th Cir. 1986).

Defrauding Creditor — Elements of Sale Necessary to Establish Ownership: A judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, Kovacich, because of failure of Norgaard to make payments for the purchase of farm machinery. Kovacich made an attempt to levy against a truck owned by Norgaard, who, upon learning the truck was going to be seized, removed it from a consignment lot and sold it to McNair, a close friend. McNair did not register the truck in his name or purchase insurance for it. The Department of Justice verified that the truck was registered to Norgaard, and thereafter a Writ of Execution was issued, pursuant to which the truck was seized. Norgaard obtained a Writ of Prohibition preventing sale of the truck. After a hearing, the District Court set aside the Writ of Prohibition, allowing Kovacich to proceed with the sale, and Norgaard appealed, contending District Court error in allowing the sale. The Supreme Court found that resolution of the issue turned on whether the transaction between Norgaard and McNair was an attempt by Norgaard to defraud his creditor. The court held that under 31-2-315 (now repealed), unless the transfer from Norgaard to McNair was accompanied by immediate delivery and followed by an actual and continued change of possession, the transfer "is conclusively presumed to be fraudulent and therefore void against those who are his creditors while he remains in possession". Finding no evidence of immediate delivery or of any actual change of possession, the District Court order allowing sale was upheld. Kovacich v. Norgaard, 221 M 26, 716 P2d 633, 43 St. Rep. 608 (1986).

Marital Separation Agreement Not Conveyance: A marital separation agreement is not a conveyance. A separation agreement incorporated into a divorce decree is enforceable only as a judgment. A judgment can be reopened if obtained through fraud but not for lack of fair consideration. It was error to annul a marital separation agreement under this section. Witbart v. Witbart, 204 M 446, 666 P2d 1217, 40 St. Rep. 994 (1983).

Growing Crops: Where grain was sold before harvesting and delivered to the elevator for purchaser as soon after harvesting as practicable, title passed upon delivery to the warehouseman. Claypool v. Malta Standard Garage, 96 M 285, 30 P2d 89 (1934).

Transfer Between Spouses: A person may do with his property as he sees fit: sell it for less than it is worth or give it away, even though he is indebted or insolvent. When fraud enters into the transaction and creditors who are affected attack the transfer as fraudulent, the insolvency of the grantor and gross inadequacy of consideration are badges of fraud. While the relationship of husband and wife is not a badge of fraud, transactions between them, because of the opportunity for fraud, are subject to the most rigid scrutiny. The fact of such relationship may be considered in determining the intention with which the transfer was made. First Nat'l Bank v. Conner, 85 M 229, 278 P 143 (1929).

Determining Factors: Whether there has been an immediate delivery and actual possession in the vendee of the thing sold depends upon the character of the article sold, the nature of the transaction, the position of the parties, and the intended use of the property. O. W. Perry Co. v. Mullen, 81 M 482, 263 P 976 (1928).

Question of Fact: When the evidence is conflicting, it is for the jury to say whether there was any such immediate delivery and actual and continued change of possession. Tomcheck v. Maryland Cas. Co., 75 M 557, 244 P 506 (1926); W. Min. Supply Co. v. Melzner, 48 M 174, 136 P 44 (1913).

Statement Insufficient: The mere statement, "It is yours", made with reference to a quantity of grain by the transferor to the transferee in an attorney's office miles away from where the grain was stored was insufficient as against an attaching creditor of the transferor. Wells v. Esgar, 72 M 333, 233 P 123 (1925).

Continued Possession: While a mere temporary change of possession of personal property will not avail against the claim of a creditor of the vendor, the change need not necessarily continue until the property is seized by the creditor. Puckett v. Hopkins, 63 M 137, 206 P 422 (1922).

Constructive Possession: Section 31-2-315 (now repealed) did not speak of actual possession, but of actual change of possession. Legal possession may be either actual or constructive. Dover Lumber Co. v. Whitcomb, 54 M 141, 168 P 947 (1917).

Reasonable Time: It is sufficient that there was a change of possession for a reasonable length of time, that is, such a period of time as will preclude the idea that the sale was a colorable one. Chestnut v. Sales, 44 M 534, 121 P 481 (1912).

Warehouse Contents: The delivery of the key to a warehouse standing on leased ground, sold to plaintiff, constituted a sufficient delivery of the property sold. W. Min. Supply Co. v. Quinn, 40 M 156, 105 P 732 (1909).

Part Delivery: When one purchases a herd of range cattle with the brand, but delivery of only a portion thereof is actually made, the vendee may not recover those not delivered from a subsequent purchaser in good faith. Ettien v. Drum, 32 M 311, 80 P 369 (1905).

Effect on Mortgages: A mortgage of personal property and transfer thereunder are void against a trustee in bankruptcy when the mortgage was made more than 14 months prior to the transfer. Stewart v. Hoffman, 31 M 184, 77 P 689 (1904).

Effect as to Assignee for Benefit for Creditors: A transfer by a debtor of property not accompanied by change of possession is not void as against the assignee for the benefit of the debtor's creditors under 31-2-315 (now repealed), as the estate does not "devolve" by such assignment, but is granted by it. Babcock v. Maxwell, 29 M 31, 74 P 64 (1903).

Instructions to Jury: Instructions on question of whether or not a sale of personal property was accompanied by immediate delivery and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the chattels were not erroneous. Morris v. McLaughlin, 25 M 151, 64 P 219 (1901).

Creditor's Right: In a creditor's suit to set aside a sale of sheep as fraudulent because there was no continued change of possession, when only a part of them remained in the possession of the purchaser at the time the creditors secured their lien, a judgment that the purchaser should deliver to the Sheriff for the benefit of the creditors all the sheep purchased or account for their proceeds was erroneous. Finch v. Kent, 24 M 268, 61 P 653 (1900).

Range Animals: When the vendors drove all their horses, which were branded alike, into a corral, and after horses sold to a purchaser had been selected from the corral, branded with a bar under the previous brand, and turned loose with other horses "on the range", and the vendors executed a bill of sale for the horses purchased, there was an immediate delivery. Dodge v. Jones, 7 M 121, 14 P 707 (1887). See Taylor v. Malta Mercantile Co., 47 M 342, 132 P 549 (1913); Dover Lumber Co. v. Whitcomb, 54 M 141, 168 P 947 (1917).

Assignment Without Delivery: An assignment of goods without an actual delivery of possession is conclusive evidence of fraud as against creditors of the assignor. Where in an action of claim and delivery by the assignee of goods against a Sheriff who had attached the goods as those of the assignor, an allegation that the assignment is fraudulent as to the attaching creditor presents a proper and material issue and should not be stricken. Botcher v. Berry, 6 M 448, 13 P 45 (1887).

Delay in Delivery: The fact that property was sold on one day and not delivered until the next does not render the sale void, if delivery was impossible on the day of sale. O'Gara v. Lowry, 5 M 427, 5 P 583 (1885).

Employment of Vendor by Vendee: The fact that the vendee of a horse and wagon employed the brother of the vendor to drive it, and subsequently, for a short time, employed the vendor, does not show such a want of continued possession in the vendee as to render the sale void. O'Gara v. Lowry, 5 M 427, 5 P 583 (1885).

Execution Against Asset Conveyed: The judgment entered by the District Court that plaintiff could proceed to levy execution against the asset conveyed was a proper remedy clearly within 31-2-321 (now repealed). Mont. Ass'n of Credit Management v. Hergert, 181 M 442, 593 P2d 1059 (1979).

Real Party in Interest: All that is necessary to constitute a plaintiff the "real party in interest" within terms of a statute authorizing him to sue is that he be vested with legal title. Therefore, an assignee of a cause of action for collection may sue. Mont. Ass'n of Credit Management v. Hergert, 181 M 442, 593 P2d 1059 (1979).

Joinder of Actions: A creditor may join with his cause of action alleging indebtedness a second cause of action alleging that debtor's giving of mortgages and conveyance of certain property was without fair consideration and made him insolvent, and a third cause of action alleging that after executing the mortgages, he had unreasonably small capital in his business. Cahill-Mooney Constr. Co. v. Ayres, 140 M 464, 373 P2d 703 (1962).

Money Judgment: The right to seek a money judgment is merely collateral to the primary right to set aside the conveyance. Cahill-Mooney Constr. Co. v. Ayres, 140 M 464, 373 P2d 703 (1962).

Parties to Actions: Although executor or administrator is not a necessary party to an action seeking to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance of decedent, he is a proper party and the creditors have the right to resort to sections 91-3209 and 91-3210, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), and cause the executor or administrator to commence and prosecute such an action. In re Estate of Adkins, 133 M 27, 319 P2d 512 (1957).

Creation of Resulting Trust: Testimony showed that decedent transferred funds to defendant to purchase property for him in order to avoid having his wife obtain an interest in the property. A court of equity will not aid one who has caused title to his property to be transferred to another for the purpose of defrauding his creditors. Here, however, no creditor was defrauded and a resulting trust was found for decedent's wife. Thompson v. Steinkamp, 120 M 475, 187 P2d 1018 (1947), followed in Hilliard v. Hilliard, 255 M 487, 844 P2d 54, 49 St. Rep. 1080 (1992).

Creditor May Follow Proceeds: A complaining creditor has the right to follow the proceeds of a fraudulent conveyance either as money or into any property in which it may have been invested, so far as it can be traced and into the possession of any person not a bona fide holder. First Nat'l Bank v. Conner, 85 M 229, 278 P 143 (1929).

Judicial Sales: A sale of personal property by a Sheriff under a provision in a chattel mortgage authorizing him to sell the property in case of default is not a judicial sale, but falls within the letter and spirit of 31-2-315 (now repealed). Kerr v. Blaine, 49 M 602, 144 P 566 (1914). See Banking Corp. of Mont. v. Hein, 52 M 238, 156 P 1085 (1916).

Legislative Intent: By 31-2-315 (now repealed) the Legislature did not intend to go further than to declare that, during the time the vendor of personal property remains in possession after sale, his creditors may seize the property in satisfaction of their claims, notwithstanding such sale. W. Min. Supply Co. v. Quinn, 40 M 156, 105 P 732 (1909).

Retention of Possession of Goods for Retail Sale: Defendants, after contracting a debt to plaintiffs for merchandise, executed a chattel mortgage to a third party covering all their property. Part of the property consisted of a stock of goods which had been used as consideration for a previous loan, which the mortgagors had used to purchase other goods. Further consideration for the previous loan were certain debts assumed by the mortgagee. The total value of the goods was only a reasonable security for the combined debt. Under the chattel mortgage, the mortgagors were to remain in possession of the goods, sell at retail for cash or on 30-days' credit in the usual course of business, and account to the mortgagee for the proceeds of the sales. One of the mortgagors was also allowed to retain living expenses from the proceeds of the sales. The balance of the proceeds, after deduction of costs, was to go to the mortgagee. The mortgagee, in fear of losing his security, made a sale of the goods by public auction prior to the maturity of the debt. These transactions were held not to be a fraud on the creditors because of the accounting required and the application of the proceeds to the debt. Noyes v. Ross, 23 M 425, 59 P 367 (1899).

DECISIONS PRIOR TO 1991 ENACTMENT
OF UNIFORM FRAUDULENT TRANSFER ACT

Effect of Delivery and Nondelivery of Possession: While title to personal property may pass by bargain and sale without delivery of possession as between the parties to the transaction, as against everyone but the seller, there must be a delivery of the possession. As a general rule, when the same personalty is sold to two different persons by transfer equally valid as between the seller and buyer, he who first lawfully acquires the possession will hold it against the other. Jackson v. McDonald, 115 M 269, 143 P2d 898 (1943).

Supporting Evidence for Findings: In an action to set aside certain conveyances as fraudulent, the evidence showed a close relationship between the interested parties, and their testimony regarding the transactions was vague and uncertain. Under the rule that unless the evidence preponderates against the findings of the jury it will be considered conclusive on appeal, the finding of no consideration for the transfer was supported by the evidence. Stone-Ordean-Wells Co. v. Strong, 94 M 20, 20 P2d 639 (1933).

Transfer Not Fraudulent: Lands alleged to have been conveyed for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff creditor had been purchased by the husband of the defendant more than 20 years before plaintiff secured judgment against her. The lands had been recorded in defendant's name, with the understanding that they should be held by her for the benefit of their children who knew of the arrangement. Defendant transferred the lands to a daughter for the benefit of all the children, without consideration, some 8 months before plaintiff commenced suit on a promissory note. Plaintiff had made no attempt to fix a lien upon the lands under the judgment recovered by him until 1 ½ years after the conveyance. The trust assumed by the defendant and subsequently discharged by conveyance to the daughter for the benefit of all the children was sufficient to protect the transfer from attack as fraudulent. Nat'l Bank of Anaconda v. Yegen, 83 M 265, 271 P 612 (1928).

Plaintiff to Make Affirmative Showing: Whether lack or gross inadequacy of consideration for the transfer of realty constitutes a badge of fraud depends upon an affirmative showing by plaintiff that the debt owing from the grantor to the creditor attacking the conveyance was in existence prior to the transfer, and that the grantor was insolvent or did not reserve sufficient property to satisfy the debt. Dick v. King, 80 M 40, 257 P 1022 (1927).

Property Must Be Subject to Creditor's Claim: Before a creditor can attack a transfer of property as fraudulent, it is incumbent upon him to show that the property disposed of was such as might otherwise have been subjected to the satisfaction of his claim. Keller v. Flanagan, 66 M 144, 213 P 222 (1923). See also Edenfield v. C.V. Seal Co., Inc., 83 M 49, 270 P 642 (1928).

Execution Against Property: When there has been a sale of personal property not accompanied by an immediate delivery and followed by an actual and continued change of possession, the vendee takes title subject to the claim of the vendor's creditor, who may subject the property to execution. Tetrault v. Ingraham, 54 M 524, 171 P 1148 (1918).

Evidence Not Admissible to Disprove Fraud in Law: In an action in claim and delivery based upon constructive fraud in a sale of personal property under 31-2-315 (now repealed), testimony offered by the buyer that the bill of sale evidencing the transaction had been filed with the county clerk, and that he had made application for insurance on the property in his own name, was properly refused. Taylor v. Malta Mercantile Co., 47 M 342, 132 P 549 (1913).

Creditor Subrogated to Equity of Partner: Defendants, after contracting a debt to plaintiffs for merchandise, executed a chattel mortgage to a third party covering all their property. The right of creditors of a partnership to have partnership debts paid out of partnership property before the debts of an individual partner is not a lien or trust, but is a derivative equity from the partner.

This equity can be made effective only through the equity of an individual partner, to which the creditor is subrogated. It follows that if such partner is in no position to enforce his equity a firm creditor cannot. If the property has ceased to belong to the partnership through a bona fide transfer, prior to the interposition of the court, the equities of the partners are extinguished, and consequently the derivative equities of the creditors are ended. It is therefore essential to any preferential right of the creditors that there is property owned by the partnership when the claim for preference is sought to be enforced. Noyes v. Ross, 23 M 425, 59 P 367 (1899).

Joint Owner in Possession: When a joint owner of personal property in the possession of another joint owner sells his interest, the failure of the purchaser to take possession does not, as against execution creditors of the seller, avoid the sale. Yank v. Bordeaux, 23 M 205, 58 P 42 (1899).

Case Notes

Breakdown of Inquiry as to Whether UFTA Statute of Limitations Applies: In determining whether the statute of limitations in subsection (1) of this section applies, the Supreme Court adopted the following three-step inquiry. (1) Did the creditor bring the claim within 1 year (see 2005 amendment) of discovering or acquiring actual knowledge of the transfer? If the answer is yes, then the creditor's claim may proceed regardless of when the transfer occurred or when or if a judgment was entered. (2) Is the date that the creditor claims discovery of the transfer reasonable? The District Court may invoke its discretion in focusing on how the diligence of the creditor weighs against the stealth of the debtor under the circumstances. If the answer is yes, it would be unreasonable to charge the creditor with knowledge of the transfer beyond 1 year prior to the date of the UFTA claim and the creditor may proceed. If the answer is no and a diligent creditor could and should have discovered the transfer more than 1 year prior to filing the claim, then the inquiry proceeds to the third prong. (3) Did the creditor nevertheless file the UFTA claim within 2 years of the debtor's transfer? (See 2005 amendment.) If the answer is yes, the claim may proceed, but if the answer is no, the claim brought under 31-2-333(1)(a) is barred pursuant to subsection (1) of this section. Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2001 MT 45, 304 M 264, 20 P3d 780 (2001).

Failure to File Suit Within Statutory Limits Precluding Action Under Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act: Plaintiff insurers brought an action in 1995 in California federal District Court demanding reimbursement for their performance pursuant to indemnity bond agreements concerning government construction contracts that Clark and other defendants breached. Plaintiffs were awarded default money judgments in 1997 after defendants failed to appear. However, shortly after the action was filed in 1995, Clark recorded five deeds conveying tracts of Montana real property from himself to his corporation. Plaintiffs alleged that the transfers were made with the actual intent to prevent plaintiffs from executing judgment against Clark individually, so in 1999, within 2 years after the federal judgment was entered in their favor, plaintiffs filed a complaint in state District Court in Montana seeking to have Clark's alleged fraudulent conveyances declared void under the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act. Clark moved for summary judgment on grounds that the statute of limitations in this section extinguished the fraudulent transfer claim, and the motion was granted under the rationale that a cause of action with respect to a fraudulent transfer must be brought either within 2 years of the transfer itself or within 1 year of the reasonable discovery of the transfer by the claimant. (See 2005 amendment.) Numerous affidavits indicated that plaintiffs were aware that Clark resided in Montana when the original indemnity agreements were entered in 1993 and had used private investigators in 1995 and 1996 to collect information on Clark's whereabouts so that the default judgment could be entered. The District Court found that plaintiffs had missed the deadline requiring filing of a claim within 2 years of transfer and that the deeds could have reasonably been discovered at any time following the date of recording. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. In this case, the claim that Clark transferred the assets with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud was afforded the more lenient statute of limitations under subsection (1) of this section, so plaintiffs had 2 years after the transfers were made or 1 year after the transfers were discovered or could reasonably have been discovered to file suit. The District Court did not err in concluding that plaintiffs could have reasonably discovered the deed transfers any time after the date of recording. Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2001 MT 45, 304 M 264, 20 P3d 780 (2001).

Statute of Limitations Under Repealed Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act Displaced by Explicit Statute of Limitations in Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act: Plaintiff insurers argued that a creditor may not assert a claim under the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act (UFTA) until after the underlying judgment is entered, citing Murphy v. Atkinson, 262 M 164, 864 P2d 273 (1993). Plaintiffs were correct to the extent that prior to the adoption of UFTA in 1991, the statute of limitations for fraudulent transfers under the now repealed Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act was supplied by the general rule for fraud under 27-2-203. However, after adoption of UFTA, Murphy, in conjunction with 27-2-203, was no longer the rule of law, but rather the statute of limitations in this section applied and provided that a judgment in hand is no longer a prerequisite for establishing standing to bring a UFTA claim. Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2001 MT 45, 304 M 264, 20 P3d 780 (2001).

When Statute of Limitations Affecting Liability for Claim Arising Before Transfer Occurs: Generally, the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act (UFTA) addresses transfers of property that have already occurred; however, 31-2-333 and 31-2-334 may establish the liability of a debtor as to a creditor whose claim arose before the transfer occurred, as in this case, if: (1) the debtor made the transfer with actual intent to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor; (2) the debtor made the transfer without receiving a reasonably equivalent value in exchange for the transfer and the debtor was engaged or about to engage in a business or transaction for which the remaining assets of the debtor were unreasonably small in relation to the business or transaction or intended to incur or believed or reasonably should have believed that debts would be incurred beyond the ability to pay as they became due; (3) the debtor made the transfer without receiving a reasonably equivalent value in exchange for the transfer and the debtor became insolvent as a result of the transfer; or (4) the transfer was made to an insider for an antecedent debt, the debtor was insolvent at the time, and the insider had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent. These actions are subject to the explicit statute of limitations under this section, and the burden of establishing facts necessary to bar a claim under UFTA rests with the debtor. Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2001 MT 45, 304 M 264, 20 P3d 780 (2001).

Transfer of Principal's Assets to Surety — Equitable Duty of Surety to Pay Principal's Obligations: Where the defendant surety company entered into an agreement with its principal requiring the principal to reimburse the defendant for any costs incurred in the bonding of the principal, received assets from its principal that made it impossible for the principal to pay a judgment, and represented the interest of the principal in litigation, the Supreme Court upheld on equitable grounds a District Court judgment against the surety for the obligations of its principal. Even though there was no contractual liability for the surety to pay the precise kind of debts incurred by the principal, the evidence showed an intent that all the principal's obligations be paid by the defendant. The legislature intends that rules be adopted by the state banking board to govern the processes and procedures for both issuing a charter and for suspending or revoking a charter for a foreign capital depository. Because the department of commerce [now department of administration] bears responsibility for the regulation and supervision of a foreign capital depository, the legislature finds it prudent to delegate rulemaking authority to that department with respect to the conduct of examinations and inspections, for mandatory reports, and for other related administrative matters. Because the financial privacy of depository customers must be afforded the highest protection possible within the parameters of state and federal law and because an applicant for a depository charter must be provided a readily discernable combination of certainty and flexibility with respect to the services provided by a depository, a blanket delegation of rulemaking authority is not granted to either the board or the department."

Procedurally Improper and Unsubstantiated Claim of Bank Alteration of Records: In an attorney's action against a bank for breach of a covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the attorney filed a motion for summary judgment in which he for the first time claimed that the bank had altered his banking records and that the alterations made it liable as a matter of law and precluded summary judgment for the bank. He presented no evidence of alteration, did not modify his complaint to add the alteration claim, attempted to have his expert on the alleged alteration added to the witness list a month after the deadline for presentation of expert witness lists, and submitted, on appeal, letters from his expert that were not part of the record below. He presented no legal authority under which the bank's alleged actions and manner of keeping his records were illegal. It was not error to deny his motion. Cate v. First Bank (N.A.)-Billings, 262 M 429, 865 P2d 277, 50 St. Rep. 1624 (1993).

Intent to Deceive: In a prosecution against the cashier of a state bank under section 6077, R.C.M. 1921 (now repealed), for knowingly exhibiting or subscribing false papers, with the intent to deceive the State Bank Examiner, it is essential to prove beyond a doubt the intent to deceive. St. v. Asal, 79 M 385, 256 P 1071 (1927). See also St. v. Arnot, 79 M 417, 256 P 1082 (1927).

Director's Duty to Report: The "making" of a report by a state bank to the Superintendent of Banks (now Department of Administration) as required by section 6071, R.C.M. 1921 (now repealed), comprehended any acts necessary to effectuate the purpose of the requirement. The attestation by a director is essential to the completion thereof and to that extent imposes upon him the duty of making the report. By attesting to the report he vouches for the absolute truthfulness of the report. An indictment charging him with a violation of the statute in so making a false report states a public offense. In re Lockhart, 72 M 136, 232 P 183 (1924).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Approval of Application: A corporation which applies to the Montana Superintendent of Banks (now State Banking Board) for an authorization becomes a bank when the application is granted by the Superintendent. First Nat'l Bank in Billings v. First Bank Stock Corp., 197 F. Supp. 417 (D.C. Mont. 1961), affirmed in 306 F2d 937 (9th Cir. 1962).

Liability in Case of Transfer — National Bank: A stockholder in a national bank transferring stock within 60 days prior to the failure of the bank is in the same position, so far as his statutory liability is concerned, as though no transfer had been made. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Peterson, 104 M 447, 67 P2d 305 (1937).

Liability for Torts Excluded: The word "debts" cannot be extended to a liability for a tort even though the claim be reduced to judgment. Capital Nat'l Bank of St. Paul v. Bartley, 101 M 591, 56 P2d 728 (1936).

Name on Stock Register: The presumption of liability for an assessment of shares of stock in an insolvent bank arising from the presence of a person's name on its stock register is rebutted by evidence that a bona fide transfer of the stock was made and that the transferor performed every duty imposed by law to secure the transfer on the bank's stock registry. Mitchell v. Banking Corp., 95 M 9, 23 P2d 978 (1933).

Pledgee Not Liable as Holder: A holder of stock in a state bank pledged it to a bank as collateral security for a loan. The pledgee bank forwarded the certificate evidencing the stock to the bank which issued it, with the request that a new certificate be issued to the pledgee although the stock belonged to the pledgor. This was done by the issuing bank. No entry appeared on the books of the issuing bank that the stock was being held by the pledgee bank other than as an absolute owner. Under this section, unqualifiedly exempting pledgees of state bank stock from the stockholder's liability, the trial court properly held that the pledgee bank was not liable as a holder of the stock. Mitchell v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 95 M 23, 24 P2d 124 (1933).

Interest on Claim: When a creditor of an insolvent bank is forced to bring suit to enforce the statutory liability of a stockholder, he is entitled to interest on his claim from the time of the commencement of the action. This is true even though the interest, when added to the principal, exceeds the amount of liability fixed by statute. Mitchell v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 94 M 165, 22 P2d 175 (1933).

Distribution of Assets of Insolvent Bank: There was nothing in the language of 32-1-333 (now repealed) amendatory of section 6036, R.C.M. 1921 (since repealed), relating to the distribution of the assets of an insolvent bank to its creditors, indicative of a clear legislative intent to change its substance. The section was but declaratory of the law as found in section 6036, R.C.M. 1921 (since repealed), and as construed in this case, that the assets must be distributed ratably under the rule that "equity is equality". State ex rel. Rankin v. Wibaux County Bank, 85 M 532, 281 P 341 (1929).

Compliance With Statute as Condition Precedent: An attempted reduction of capital stock of a state bank was rendered ineffectual under section 6033, R.C.M. 1921 (now repealed). The filed certificate of the proceedings of the stockholders' meeting at which the reduction was voted did not state the whole amount of the debts and liabilities of the bank, and the chairman neither certified nor acknowledged such certificate. Compliance with the requirements of the law prescribing the steps necessary to effectuate a reduction is a condition precedent to reduction. Mitchell v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 83 M 581, 273 P 1055 (1929).

When Stockholders' Liability Enforceable: When an insolvent state bank is shown not to have any assets, a creditor may proceed against the stockholders on their statutory liability without first bringing an action against the corporation to determine that it is without assets from which his claim might be satisfied. Brown v. Roberts, 78 M 301, 254 P 419 (1927).

Liability as Guaranty: The double liability to creditors imposed upon the stockholders of an insolvent state bank by section 6036, R.C.M. 1921 (now repealed), is in the nature of a guaranty. It will not support an attachment as upon a contract for the direct payment of money in an action by the receiver to collect an assessment levied upon the stock of a delinquent stockholder. Muri v. Young, 75 M 213, 245 P 956 (1926).

Method of Enforcing Liability: The holder of bank stock has no vested right in any particular method or procedure for enforcing his liability. He cannot object to the adoption of a new method for enforcing it. Under Ch. 9, L. 1923 (now repealed), which was passed after the bank became insolvent, the receiver could commence an action against the stockholders instead of the creditors. This did not prejudice the stockholder in any of his rights. Springhorn v. Dirks, 72 M 121, 231 P 912 (1924).

Stockholder as Creditor: When a stockholder in a banking or trust corporation is also its creditor, he cannot have his claim set off against his stockholder's liability. He must discharge his liability and then proceed to recover on his claim as other creditors are required to. Barth v. Pock, 51 M 418, 155 P 282 (1915).

Compiler's Comments

2005 Amendment: Chapter 163 throughout section after "corporation" deleted reference to foreign capital depository; and in (3) near middle after "association" deleted "or foreign capital depository". Amendment effective October 1, 2005.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 382 throughout section, in nine places, inserted reference to foreign capital depository.

1997 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 382, L. 1997, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because the bill gives the state banking board and the department of commerce [now department of administration] authority to adopt administrative rules to effectuate the purposes, policies, and provisions of this bill. The legislature intends that rules be adopted by the state banking board to govern the processes and procedures for both issuing a charter and for suspending or revoking a charter for a foreign capital depository. Because the department of commerce [now department of administration] bears responsibility for the regulation and supervision of a foreign capital depository, the legislature finds it prudent to delegate rulemaking authority to that department with respect to the conduct of examinations and inspections, for mandatory reports, and for other related administrative matters. Because the financial privacy of depository customers must be afforded the highest protection possible within the parameters of state and federal law and because an applicant for a depository charter must be provided a readily discernable combination of certainty and flexibility with respect to the services provided by a depository, a blanket delegation of rulemaking authority is not granted to either the board or the department."

1993 Amendment: Chapter 395 at beginning of (1) substituted "A person desiring to organize a banking corporation shall make and file articles of incorporation with the department and, upon approval by the department, may file the articles with the secretary of state as provided in Title 35, chapter 1. The articles of incorporation must set forth" for "Any three or more persons desiring to associate themselves together for the purpose of becoming a corporation to engage in any one or more or all of the businesses mentioned in this chapter shall sign and acknowledge, in the manner provided for the acknowledgment of deeds of real estate, articles of agreement which shall set forth"; in (1)(a) substituted "the information required by 35-1-216(1)" for former language that read: "the corporate name of the proposed corporation, which may not be the name of any other corporation granted and then doing business of a similar character in this state or any imitation of a name, provided that it is lawful to use the name used by any corporation previously incorporated and doing business in the state of Montana but which has been disincorporated, liquidated, dissolved, and is entirely out of business. A banking corporation may not adopt or use the name of any other banking corporation or association, or of any friendly association"; deleted former (1)(c) that read: "the amount of the capital stock of the corporation, the number of shares into which it is to be divided, and the par value of shares; the amount of capital stock actually subscribed in good faith at the time of the signing of the articles of agreement; and the amount of the capital stock actually paid up in lawful money of the United States and in the custody of some banking institution designated as the depository of the money until the proposed corporation is fully organized and authorized to engage in business"; in (1)(c), before "shareholders", substituted "initial" for "several"; in (1)(d) deleted second sentence that read: "The articles may provide that the number of directors elected at each annual meeting shall constitute the board for the year, all vacancies to be filled by the board taking the action, and also may provide that a majority of the full board of trustees may increase the number of the directors of the bank, not exceeding two, and appoint persons to fill the resulting vacancies between meetings of the stockholders"; in (1)(e), before "is formed", substituted "banking corporation" for "association or company"; in (2), near beginning, substituted "in subsection (1)" for "therein" and at end, after "provisions", substituted reference to 35-1-216(2) for "not inconsistent with law regarding the elimination or limitation of the personal liability of a director to a corporation or its shareholders for monetary damages for breach of fiduciary duty as a director, except:

(a) for breach of a director's duty of loyalty to a corporation or its shareholders;

(b) for acts or omissions that constitute willful misconduct, recklessness, or a knowing violation of law; or

(c) for a transaction from which a director derives an improper personal benefit"; inserted (3) prohibiting banking corporation from adopting name of another corporation or association; inserted (4) prohibiting banking corporation from incorporating until submission of articles to Department or until certificate of authorization is obtained; inserted (5) prohibiting banking corporation from amending or restating articles until articles of amendment or restatement are approved by Department; inserted (6) providing that articles of agreement are articles of incorporation for banks organized before October 1, 1993; and made minor changes in style.

1989 Amendment: Inserted (2) relating to limitation of Director's personal liability; and made minor changes in form and phraseology. Amendment effective March 23, 1989.

Applicability: Section 3(2), Ch. 278, L. 1989, provided: "[This act] applies to acts and omissions occurring after the effective date of [this act]." Effective March 23, 1989.

1985 Amendment: In (5) after "annual meeting" and after "not exceeding two", deleted "within the limits specified in this chapter".

32-1-302. Incorporation.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 395 in three places substituted reference to articles of incorporation for "articles of agreement"; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Due Process: Protestant bank has no statutory right to a hearing or to an adversary, trial-type hearing with an opportunity to examine and cross-examine witnesses or to elicit disclosure of confidential information from the Superintendent of Banks (now Department of Administration) so that it might have an opportunity to answer in proceeding when Superintendent of Banks (now Department of Administration) conditionally approves a state bank charter application based on confidential information. Miners & Merchants Bank v. Dowdall, 158 M 142, 489 P2d 1274 (1971). Decision prior to enactment of 32-1-204.

Creation of Bank: When the Superintendent of Banks (now Department of Administration) issued a certificate of authority for the establishment of a bank, the capital having been previously paid in, the organization became a state bank within the meaning of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (U.S.C., Title 12, sec. 1841 through 1848), even though it did not actually commence business until some time later. First Nat'l Bank in Billings v. First Bank Stock Corp., 197 F. Supp. 417 (D.C. Mont. 1961), affirmed in 306 F2d 937 (9th Cir. 1962).

32-1-307. Amount of capital.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 395 substituted language requiring Division in consultation with Board to determine appropriate level of capitalization of proposed corporation prior to issuance of certificate for former section that read: "(1) The amount of the common and preferred stock of a commercial bank shall not be less than $25,000, and in addition thereto there shall be created a surplus of not less than 10% of the amount of the capital stock of said bank, which said surplus and capital stock shall be paid up in cash and deposited with some bank or banks at the time the application is made to the department for the certificate of authorization hereinabove mentioned.

(2) A commercial bank having its place of business in a city or town of more than 2,000 and less than 4,000 inhabitants, as disclosed by the last authorized census, shall have a capital stock of not less than $30,000 and a surplus of 10% of the capital stock as hereinbefore provided. A commercial bank having its place of business in a city or town of more than 4,000 inhabitants, as disclosed by the last authorized census, shall have a capital stock of not less than $50,000 and a surplus of 10% of the capital stock as hereinbefore provided.

(3) The amount of the capital stock of a savings bank, trust company, or investment company shall be fixed and limited by the articles of agreement and shall be not less than $100,000 or more than $10 million, of which amount at least $100,000 must be subscribed and fully paid up in cash and on deposit with some bank or banks in this state when the application is made to the department for the certificate of authorization hereinabove mentioned. The remainder of the authorized capital stock may be subscribed and paid in at such times and under such regulations as the board of directors of such corporation may determine. The shares of the common capital stock of all banks shall have a par value of $100 or such less amount as may be provided in the articles of incorporation, provided that this chapter shall not require any bank in existence and doing business to increase its capital stock."

Case Notes

Stock — Constitutes Property: Shares of stock of a state bank or trust company fall within the definition of the term "property" as given in Art. XII, sec. 17, 1889 Mont. Const. (Art. VIII, sec. 3, 1972 Mont. Const.), and must be assessed to their owners at their full cash value, except to the extent that that value is represented in property which is assessed to the bank or company. Mont. Nat'l Bank of Billings v. Yellowstone County, 78 M 62, 252 P 876 (1926), reversed on other grounds in 276 US 499, 72 L Ed 673, 48 S Ct 331 (1929), conformed to 82 M 380, 267 P 304 (1928).

32-1-308. Bylaws.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 395 deleted (1) that read: "(1) The persons signing the articles of agreement shall at their first meeting adopt bylaws for the government of the corporation, which bylaws may provide for:

(a) the time, place, and manner of calling and conducting the meetings of the corporation;

(b) the number of stockholders constituting a quorum;

(c) the mode of voting by proxy;

(d) the time of the annual election of directors and the mode and manner of giving notice thereof;

(e) the duties of officers;

(f) the manner of election and the tenure of office of all officers other than the directors;

(g) suitable penalties for violation of bylaws, not exceeding in any case $100 for any one offense"; in first sentence, after "bylaws", deleted "adopted", in second sentence, after "hours", deleted "of each day except holidays", and deleted former last sentence that read: "The bylaws may be repealed or amended or new bylaws be adopted at the annual meetings or at any other meeting of the stockholders called for that purpose by the directors, by a vote representing two-thirds of the subscribed stock, or the power to repeal and amend the bylaws and adopt new bylaws may, by a similar vote at the first meeting or any annual meeting, be delegated to the board of directors"; and made minor changes in style.

32-1-321. Calling of first meeting — cancellation of certificate.

Case Notes

Commencement of Business: A corporation did not cease to be a bank because it did not commence business within 1 year from the date of its incorporation as required by section 15-808, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), when the Superintendent of Banks (now Department of Administration) did not cancel his certificate of authorization, as authorized by this section, but continued to recognize the corporation as a bank. First Nat'l Bank in Billings v. First Bank Stock Corp., 197 F. Supp. 417 (D.C. Mont. 1961), affirmed in 306 F2d 937 (9th Cir. 1962).

32-1-322. Board of directors — qualifications, tenure, and vacancies.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 395 in (2), in second sentence after "held", deleted "on any business day" and near end of third sentence, after "until", substituted "successors" for "the second Tuesday of the following January or until others"; deleted (3) that read: "(3) In case of death or resignation of one or more of the directors, the vacancy shall be filled by the board and the directors so appointed shall hold office until the next annual election"; and made minor changes in style.

1989 Amendment: In first sentence of (1), after "number", deleted "all of whom shall be stockholders as required by 32-1-324 and", at end of first sentence substituted "Montana" for "this state", and inserted second sentence providing shareholder requirements of corporation directors; in (2), at end of third sentence after "chapter", deleted "and that he is the owner in good faith of the required number of shares of stock as required by 32-1-324"; and made minor change in grammar. Amendment effective February 18, 1989.

1985 Amendment: In (1) after "not less than", substituted "three" for "3 or more than 11" and after "stockholders", substituted "as required by 32-1-324" for "of the bank"; and near end of (2) substituted "as required by 32-1-324" for "in the bank standing in his name on the books of the bank".

1983 Amendment: In (2), changed annual meeting date from "any Tuesday up to and including the second Tuesday in April" to "any business day before April 15".

1981 Amendment: Deleted "and citizens of the United States" after "stockholders of the bank" in (1).

Case Notes

Director as Surety: A bank director became surety on a bond given by the bank to secure deposits of public funds. His office did not disqualify him from accepting notes and mortgages from the bank to indemnify him for possible loss because of his suretyship. This was true when the bank was believed to be solvent at the time, and the transaction was in entire good faith. Ainsworth v. Kruger, 80 M 468, 260 P 1055 (1927).

32-1-325. Selection of officers and employees — minutes of meetings.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 395 in (3), near beginning of first sentence after "directors", deleted "shall also elect a secretary" and in third sentence, at end, substituted "the person responsible for preparing the minutes" for "secretary"; and made minor changes in style.

1985 Amendment: In (1) changed "once a month" to "quarterly".

1983 Amendment: In last sentence of (2), deleted "and at least one vice-president" before "shall be chosen from the board of directors".

32-1-335. Purchase or loan of own capital stock prohibited — exception.

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 105 deleted former last sentence that read: "A person or corporation violating any provision of this section shall forfeit to the state twice the nominal amount of the capital stock." Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 36 inserted second sentence allowing purchase or loan of own capital stock with department approval; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 13, 2001.

Case Notes

Transfer of Assets Due to Impairment: A bank in need of funds to make good an impairment of its capital stock transferred certain questionable assets to its vice-president at their face value. He, in accordance with a resolution of the directors, secured a loan on his note, which was guaranteed by certain stockholders of the bank. The money was placed to the bank's credit. The transaction was not an absolute sale of the assets. The guaranteeing stockholder bringing this suit was entitled to reimbursement by the bank or, upon its suspension, to have his claim as one of its general creditors approved by the receiver (see 2001 amendment). Lyon v. Featherman, 80 M 504, 261 P 268 (1927).

32-1-339. Right of examination by stockholder.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 395 in second sentence, after "inspect", substituted "the books and records" for "during business hours the general statement book showing the general assets and liabilities" and at end, after "bank", inserted "as provided in Title 35, chapter 1, part 11"; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Constitutionality: This section is not a special law or one making an unreasonable classification in making the act applicable only to state banks. State ex rel. Powell v. St. Bank of Moore, 90 M 539, 4 P2d 717, 80 ALR 1494 (1931).

Effect of National Power: Since Congress alone has the power to regulate the internal affairs of national banks and, by its failure to declare upon the right of a stockholder in such a bank to inspect its books and records, left the common law on that subject in force, this section, limiting the right of inspection to stockholders in state banks, may not be held unconstitutional as discriminatory because it does not extend the same right to stockholders in all banks doing business in the state. State ex rel. Powell v. St. Bank of Moore, 90 M 539, 4 P2d 717, 80 ALR 1494 (1931).

Mandamus: If the rule declared by some courts that, since the granting of a Writ of Mandate is largely a matter of discretion, the remedy may be denied where it involves determination of the constitutionality of a statute is sound, it is inapplicable in a case where the Writ is sought to compel permission to inspect books and records of a state bank by a stockholder under this section. State ex rel. Powell v. St. Bank of Moore, 90 M 539, 4 P2d 717, 80 ALR 1494 (1931).

Petition by Stockholder: A stockholder in a state bank who seeks to compel officers of the bank to permit inspection of the bank's books and records, proceeding under this section, which grants such right as to the general statement book showing the bank's general assets and liabilities, excluding others (see 1993 amendment), must in his petition for a Writ of Mandate allege that the books and records enumerated in his demand do not contain information prescribed by the act. State ex rel. Powell v. St. Bank of Moore, 90 M 539, 4 P2d 717, 80 ALR 1494 (1931).

32-1-340. Conversion of surplus and undivided profits to capital stock.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 395 in (2), after "vote", deleted "of two-thirds" and after "stock" deleted "in person or by proxy"; deleted former (4) that read: "New capital stock when issued by a bank against its surplus and undivided profits may be issued without the payment of cash for it, but it shall be charged upon the books of the bank and in the statements of the bank against surplus and undivided profits so that the combined capital, surplus, and undivided profits are not reduced by the issuance of the new stock"; deleted (6) that read: "(6) If the department approves of the issuance of the new stock and so notifies the bank, the bank shall then file a certificate of issuance with the county clerk and recorder of the county in which the bank is located and with the secretary of state. Upon the filing with the secretary of state, the increase becomes effective"; and made minor changes in style.

32-1-361. Change from state to national bank.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 395 in (2)(a), after "notice", substituted "of the change once a week for 4 consecutive weeks" for "thereof for 30 days"; and made minor changes in style.

32-1-362. National bank powers extended to state banks.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 36 in (2) inserted last sentence allowing bank to act if department fails to act on application. Amendment effective March 13, 2001.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 100 in (1)(a) inserted "or interpretive ruling issued or"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 117 in (1), at beginning of first sentence, deleted "With the consent of the department" and after "national bank" inserted "if the power or activity is not expressly prohibited or limited by the laws of this state and"; substituted (1)(a) and (1)(b) concerning powers and activities authorized for national banks and application approved by Department for second sentence that read: "The department may prescribe, amend, and repeal regulations affecting and controlling the exercise of the powers granted by this section, provided that, subject to subsection (2), such regulations and powers shall not apply to activities which are expressly prohibited or limited by the statutes of the state"; substituted (2) concerning applications for former text that read: "If the United States congress allows national banks to establish branches without regard to state prohibitions, a bank organized under the laws of Montana may, with the consent of the department, establish a branch under the same conditions allowed national banks, despite the restrictions imposed by 32-1-372"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 20, 1997.

1981 Amendment: Inserted "subject to subsection (2)" before "such regulations and powers shall not apply" in (1); added (2) allowing state branch banking if federal government allows national branch banking without regard to state prohibitions.

Case Notes

Consolidation of Banks: Section 5-1124, R.C.M. 1947 (repealed in 1969), provided that when two or more banks in the same county or in adjoining counties consolidate, the consolidated bank may, on the written consent of the Superintendent of Banks (now Department of Administration), maintain and operate offices in the locations of the consolidating banks. This created an exception to this section, which prior to the 1989 amendment prohibited branch banking, and permitted branch banking in limited cases. Here, one federal bank, which was a subsidiary of a bank holding company, acquired the assets of another federal bank in exchange for holding company stock. The bank then consolidated with the other bank and maintained banking facilities at the locations of both consolidated banks. Leuthold v. Camp, 273 F. Supp. 695 (D.C. Mont. 1967), affirmed in 405 F2d 499 (9th Cir. 1969).

Holding Company Banking: This section does not prohibit holding company banking. First Nat'l Bank in Billings v. First Bank Stock Corp., 197 F. Supp. 417 (D.C. Mont. 1961), affirmed in 306 F2d 937 (9th Cir. 1962).

Intention to Operate as Branch: A state bank whose stock was substantially all owned by a national bank did not violate this section prior to the 1989 amendment, although the interlocking directorates of the national bank and the state bank at one time intended that the state bank should operate as a branch of the national bank, when steps were taken to eliminate any such intention. First Nat'l Bank in Billings v. First Bank Stock Corp., 197 F. Supp. 417 (D.C. Mont. 1961), affirmed in 306 F2d 937 (9th Cir. 1962).

DECISIONS UNDER CURRENT LAW

Existence of Fiduciary Duty Considered Question of Law, Not Fact — Summary Judgment on Question Proper if No Genuine Issue of Material Fact Exists: To resolve several inconsistent prior opinions, the Supreme Court held that the issue of whether a fiduciary duty exists between two parties is a question of law, not fact, and thus may be resolved on summary judgment if no genuine issues of material fact exist. Similarly, the issue of whether a special relationship exists between two parties that would give rise to a fiduciary relationship is also a question of law, not fact. In order to determine whether a special relationship exists in cases in which it does not normally exist, such as between a bank and a customer, a court may be required to make a fact-intensive inquiry. The circumstances of a particular relationship are factual, so disputes over material facts will preclude summary judgment, but the conclusion drawn by a court from undisputed facts is one of law, not of fact. Gliko v. Permann, 2006 MT 30, 331 M 112, 130 P3d 155 (2006), overruling Davis v. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, 258 M 286, 852 P2d 640 (1993), and Kondelik v. First Fidelity Bank of Glendive, 259 M 446, 857 P2d 687 (1993).

No Theft Prosecution for Removal of Funds From Joint Account: Kane was charged with theft for purposely or knowingly obtaining or exerting unauthorized control over funds and other items belonging to Hilger. Kane filed a motion to dismiss, which the District Court granted on grounds that as a joint tenant on a checking account with Hilger, Kane could not, as a matter of law, be prosecuted for theft of funds taken from the joint account. The state contended that 72-6-211 governed the joint account and permitted prosecution for theft in such cases. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the statute did not apply to controversies between cotenants. Absent evidence that Kane had threatened or deceived Hilger into establishing the joint tenant arrangement, Kane's actions did not make out the elements of criminal theft. St. v. Kane, 1999 MT 337, 297 M 421, 992 P2d 1283, 56 St. Rep. 1343 (1999), following St. v. Haack, 220 M 141, 713 P2d 1001 (1986), and distinguishing St. v. Curtis, 241 M 288, 787 P2d 306, 47 St. Rep. 277 (1990).

Bank's Fiduciary Duty to Borrower: The relationship between a bank and a person to whom it lends money is generally that of creditor and debtor and, as such, does not impose fiduciary duties on the bank except on proof of special circumstances, such as a situation in which the bank acts as an adviser. Security agreements between the bank and the company and its owners were part of the creditor/debtor relationship. The bank merely exercised its rights under the security agreements and the law when it foreclosed on the collateral. Even assuming that the bank owed a fiduciary duty to the company and its owners, there could be no breach of such duty when the bank acted for legitimate business reasons in accordance with the security agreements. Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045, 48 St. Rep. 730 (1991). See also Kondelik v. First Fidelity Bank of Glendive, 259 M 446, 857 P2d 687, 50 St. Rep. 874 (1993). Kondelik was overruled, to the extent that the issue of whether a fiduciary duty or a special relationship exists between two parties is a question of law, not fact, in Gliko v. Permann, 2006 MT 30, 331 M 112, 130 P3d 155 (2006).

No Negligence Regarding Repayment Term of Loan: Borrowers argued that bank was negligent in structuring a loan, but they cited no authority to support the proposition that a negligence action may be based on a repayment term of a lawful contract bargained between two parties. Absent the existence of a fiduciary duty, which bank did not have with respect to the loan, the law does not support such a claim. Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045, 48 St. Rep. 730 (1991).

No Tortious Interference With Borrower's Business Relationships: To establish a prima facie case of tortious interference with business relations, a person must show intentional and willful acts that are calculated to damage the person's business without right or justifiable cause and that are done with the unlawful purpose of causing damage or loss. Lender bank was merely exercising its right granted by a security agreement when, prior to notifying borrower, bank notified a business with which borrower had an account receivable that bank had a specific assignment from borrower of accounts receivable and requested the business to issue future payments with both bank and borrower as payees. Bank did not commit tortious interference with borrower's business relationships. Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045, 48 St. Rep. 730 (1991), followed in St. v. Kandarian, 268 M 408, 886 P2d 954, 51 St. Rep. 1381 (1994).

Forged Check — Plaintiffs' Contribution to Damages — Bank Not Liable: When there was substantial credible evidence that plaintiffs' actions contributed to their damages, the jury verdict in favor of defendant bank would not be overturned. When the complaint alleged negligence and bad faith on the part of the bank but not breach of a fiduciary duty, the Supreme Court refused to consider whether it was error to submit the issue of comparative negligence to the jury. Ahmann v. Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n, 235 M 184, 766 P2d 853, 45 St. Rep. 2305 (1988).

Banks — Real Estate Sale — No Fiduciary Relationship: The bank prepared a mortgage and deed of trust as a service to and at request of the buyer and the sellers. Upon default of the buyer, the sellers filed an action for declaratory ruling as to rights between the bank and the sellers. The sellers argued there was a fiduciary relationship between themselves and the bank. The court found there were no special circumstances present that would create a fiduciary relationship when the bank did not find the buyer or advise on the terms of the sale, the sellers maintained accounts in other banks, and the sellers had dealt with the loan department on only a few occasions prior to the transaction in question. The sellers' dealings with the bank were not of the exclusive repeated nature necessary to justify finding a fiduciary relationship. Pulse v. N. Am. Land Title Co. of Mont., 218 M 275, 707 P2d 1105, 42 St. Rep. 1578 (1985), followed in Simmons v. Jenkins, 230 M 429, 750 P2d 1067, 45 St. Rep. 328 (1988). See also Mann Farms, Inc. v. Bank's Fiduciary Duty to Customers It Gives Financial Advice — Real Estate Sales: Wife, whose husband had recently died, signed a contract for a deed to her ranch with Dittman, who signed as "trustee". There were two other purchasers, who did not sign: a person to whom, according to the evidence, wife would not have knowingly sold and the marketing officer of the bank used by the wife and husband for some 24 years. Wife was unfamiliar with real estate and financial affairs and relied upon the advice of various bank officers with regard to the sale of the ranch. This put the bank in a prima facie fiduciary relationship as to the wife. The relationship and its attendant duties extended to the advising officers in their dealings with the wife in regard to sale of the ranch. The marketing officer thus had a duty to fully inform the wife and protect her interests. This duty he breached, and the breach amounted to constructive fraud, where evidence showed that: (1) the contract price and terms were disadvantageous to the wife; (2) the true purchasers were not disclosed to her either by the contract or the marketing officer; (3) the purchasers intended to and began to subdivide and sell the ranch, though the marketing officer knew wife apparently did not wish this, having refused an earlier offer to purchase with right to subdivide; (4) the marketing officer had extensive financial interests involving loans to him from his bank, and an audit of the bank recommended that in view of this his lending authority should be eliminated or curtailed; and (5) the lower court was unimpressed with the way in which wife's attorney in the negotiations represented her interests. The lower court properly ordered the contract for deed rescinded. Deist v. Wachholz, 208 M 207, 678 P2d 188, 41 St. Rep. 286 (1984).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Deception in Creation of Joint Account: The defendant, relying on St. v. Haack, 220 M 141, 713 P2d 1001 (1986), argued that her conviction for theft should be overturned because the victim had agreed to set up the joint account and had approved her actions. The Supreme Court held that the defendant's case was distinguishable from Haack because the issue in the defendant's case was whether she had used deception in getting the victim to open the account. The court held that there was sufficient evidence to support the jury's guilty verdict. St. v. Curtis, 241 M 288, 787 P2d 306, 47 St. Rep. 277 (1990), distinguished in St. v. Kane, 1999 MT 337, 297 M 421, 992 P2d 1283, 56 St. Rep. 1343 (1999).

Withdrawal of Funds by Co-Owner From Joint Tenancy Bank Account: As a matter of law, a co-owner of a joint tenancy bank account cannot be convicted of the crime of theft for withdrawing funds from the joint tenancy account. A joint tenancy bank account is a special relationship between co-owners; this special relationship precludes application of the theft laws. Section 45-6-303, relating to the offender's interest in property, requires the owner to have "an interest to which the offender is not entitled". The special relationship between co-owners in a joint tenancy bank account ensures that there is no "interest to which the offender is not entitled" by a joint tenant. St. v. Haack, 220 M 141, 713 P2d 1001, 43 St. Rep. 242 (1986), followed in St. v. Kane, 1999 MT 337, 297 M 421, 992 P2d 1283, 56 St. Rep. 1343 (1999).

Death of Partner — Disposition of Property Held Jointly by Partners: Robert and William, brothers, opened a joint checking account in 1947, paid all ranch expenses through the account, put all ranch income in the account, and equally split net profits. All cattle were branded with either of two brands, each of which was registered in the name of "William Palmer or Robert Palmer". The brothers were also joint tenants in a commodity brokerage account. The Supreme Court held that the cattle and both accounts were partnership property not held in joint tenancy and remained so upon Robert's death. Thus, they did not pass to William as the surviving joint tenant; rather, they remained in the partnership for the purpose of winding up the partnership and paying its liabilities, after which William must account to Robert's survivor, his widow, for Robert's share of the partnership. By its very nature, partnership property must be treated differently than property of individuals, including property held by individuals as joint tenants but who are not in partnership. This rule applies regardless of the formal legal manner in which the property is held. This is a rule of equity developed over hundreds of years and codified in the Uniform Partnership Act. In re Estate of Palmer, 218 M 285, 708 P2d 242, 42 St. Rep. 1585 (1985), followed in Fiedler v. Fiedler, 266 M 133, 879 P2d 675, 51 St. Rep. 691 (1994).

Creation of Tenancy in Common in Bank Account — Rights of Creditor: When the signature card for a bank account did not specify that the two account holders had rights of survivorship, the estate created was that of a tenancy in common rather than a joint tenancy. Therefore, the creditor of one account holder was entitled to only one-half of the total amount of funds in the account. Univ. of Mont. v. Coe, 217 M 234, 704 P2d 1029, 42 St. Rep. 1160 (1985), distinguished in Seman v. Lewis, 252 M 508, 830 P2d 1294, 49 St. Rep. 206 (1992).

Extrinsic Evidence of Ownership of Joint Bank Account Inadmissible When Third-Party Rights Involved: Evidence of the intent of the parties with respect to ownership of funds in a joint bank account is admissible only in a dispute between those parties and not when the dispute involves the rights of a third party. Univ. of Mont. v. Coe, 217 M 234, 704 P2d 1029, 42 St. Rep. 1160 (1985), distinguished in Seman v. Lewis, 252 M 508, 830 P2d 1294, 49 St. Rep. 206 (1992), in which extrinsic evidence regarding intent was held admissible because it was submitted to supplement rather than contradict the uncertain terms of the signature card.

Addition of Name to Signature Card Not Proof of Intent to Make Gift: The plaintiff added her nephew's name to a joint tenancy signature card for her bank checking account to facilitate the administration of her estate upon her death. All money in the account was deposited by the plaintiff, who exercised exclusive control over the account. The plaintiff transferred money from the account to her nephew and his wife, who used the sums to purchase real estate. After her nephew died, the plaintiff sought to secure title to the real property when her nephew's wife refused to repay the money the plaintiff had given the couple and which she considered a loan to them. The defendant, who is plaintiff's nephew's widow, contended the money was a gift to the couple. However, the plaintiff testified at length that the money was intended as a loan to her nephew. The addition of her nephew's name to the signature card of her checking account was not sufficient evidence to overcome the plaintiff's testimony that there was no donative intent. When a depositor during her lifetime raises the issue of ownership of funds in a joint tenancy account, the statements on the signature card are not conclusive and additional evidence may be examined to ascertain the true intent of the parties. To constitute a gift, the addition of a party's signature to a bank account signature card must satisfy all the requirements of a gift inter vivos: delivery, donative intent, and acceptance by the donee. The signature cards of joint tenancy accounts are forms containing language drafted by the depository institution and may not accurately express the intentions and relationships between the joint tenants. Peterson v. Kabrich, 213 M 401, 691 P2d 1360, 41 St. Rep. 2196 (1984).

Joint Tenancy in Certificate and Account Upheld by Contract and Gift Theories — Single Signature on Bank Card Sufficient: The deceased sister of the plaintiff purchased certificates of deposit and opened a checking account, all made payable to the decedent or the defendant husband, but only the decedent signed the bank's signature cards and the defendant was never told of the certificates and the account. After the decedent was declared to have died intestate, the plaintiff brought an action to recover the amount of the account and certificates. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the District Court, holding that the decedent had established a valid joint tenancy, under either a gift or contract legal theory, in both the account and certificates. The decedent's signature alone on the bank card is sufficient donative intent to constitute a gift under the rationale of St. Bd. of Equalization v. Cole, 122 M 9, 195 P2d 989 (1943), and there was sufficient evidence to hold that a contract existed to make a gift to the defendant. Malek v. Patten, 208 M 237, 678 P2d 201, 41 St. Rep. 305 (1984).

Joint Tenancy Distinguished: A joint bank account differs from other types of joint tenancies in that in the latter case a transfer by one cotenant of his interest to a third party creates a tenancy in common as between the remaining cotenant and transferee. One cotenant can only transfer the amount of his interest. On the other hand, either joint owner of a joint bank account, by virtue of the special contract with the bank, can acquire dominion over the entire account by drawing a proper order on the bank. A joint bank account is otherwise subject to the same rules as other joint tenancies. St. Bd. of Equalization v. Cole, 122 M 9, 195 P2d 989 (1948).

Husband and Wife Joint Bank Account — Withdrawals: When husband and wife have a joint bank account to which the former has contributed, the latter may withdraw it and use it as she may choose. Kranjcec v. Belinak, 114 M 26, 132 P2d 150 (1942).

Signature Card as Contract: When a mother and daughter signed a signature card containing a provision that the entire account or any part could be withdrawn by or upon the order of either of them, in opening a joint account at the bank, the card amounted to a contract between the parties, and when the daughter drew a check covering practically the entire account, the bank was legally bound to pay it although made without the mother's consent, and the court was bound by the contract. The bank was not liable in an action for conversion. Ludwig v. Mont. Bank & Trust Co., 109 M 477, 98 P2d 377 (1939).

Guardian as Trustee: The position of guardian is one of trust and not of agency. The funds coming into the hands of the guardian are trust funds which he must keep safely. Such funds as are necessary to be kept on hand for the care of his ward, he may deposit in a reliable bank. If due care is exercised in selecting the bank, he is not open to the charge of violating his trust and is not personally liable for the deposit in case of the failure of the bank. Pethybridge v. First St. Bank of Livingston, 75 M 173, 243 P 569 (1926).

32-1-412. Limits on excessive borrowing.

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 105 substituted current text concerning prevention of excessive borrowing for former text that read: "(1) Except as provided in subsection (3), a bank may not borrow money except to meet its seasonal requirements or unexpected withdrawals. The bills payable and rediscounts of a bank may not be permitted to exceed in the aggregate an amount equal to the capital and surplus of the bank, except with the written consent of the department. Security instruments sold under an agreement to repurchase do not apply to the limit on borrowing contained in this section. The division may prohibit excessive amounts of borrowing structured as a security instrument sold under an agreement to repurchase to a single customer or within the bank. When it appears to the department that a bank is borrowing money in excess of the limitation provided by this section or for the purposes other than as specified in this section, the department may require it to reduce the borrowing within a time to be fixed by the department.

(2) Subject to subsections (1) and (3), a bank may not at any time become indebted, either directly or indirectly, for borrowed money or rediscounts in an amount in excess of its paid-up capital and surplus without first obtaining written authority from the department. Debentures or certificates of indebtedness issued by an investment company to run for a period of 3 years or more may not be included in the deposit liabilities of that investment company, as affected by the provisions of this section.

(3) A bank may borrow funds from a federal home loan bank for use:

(a) in financing home ownership;

(b) in financing affordable housing programs;

(c) in financing small business, small farm, and agribusiness loans; or

(d) in interest rate risk management, liquidity management, or other banking activities undertaken pursuant to federal home loan bank advance programs authorized under the Federal Home Loan Bank Act or undertaken pursuant to rules or regulations of the federal housing finance board.

(4) Loans or extensions of credit from a federal home loan bank are not subject to any limitations based on capital or surplus. The division may prevent excessive borrowing by an institution." Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 36 inserted (3)(c) relating to financing small business, small farm, and agribusiness loans; in (3)(d) at end inserted reference to liquidity management or other banking activities allowable under federal law; in (4) inserted first sentence exempting loans or extensions of credit from federal home loan banks from capital or surplus limitations; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 13, 2001.

Purpose of Section: It would seem the purpose of this section is to require banks, if they desire to "borrow" money, to execute the instrument evidencing the debt with the authority and in the manner required in executing a corporate note. Case Notes

Bank's Fiduciary Duty to Borrower: The relationship between a bank and a person to whom it lends money is generally that of creditor and debtor and, as such, does not impose fiduciary duties on the bank except on proof of special circumstances, such as a situation in which the bank acts as an adviser. Security agreements between the bank and the company and its owners were part of the creditor/debtor relationship. The bank merely exercised its rights under the security agreements and the law when it foreclosed on the collateral. Even assuming that the bank owed a fiduciary duty to the company and its owners, there could be no breach of such duty when the bank acted for legitimate business reasons in accordance with the security agreements. Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045, 48 St. Rep. 730 (1991).

No Negligence Regarding Repayment Term of Loan: Borrowers argued that bank was negligent in structuring a loan, but they cited no authority to support the proposition that a negligence action may be based on a repayment term of a lawful contract bargained between two parties. Absent the existence of a fiduciary duty, which bank did not have with respect to the loan, the law does not support such a claim. Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045, 48 St. Rep. 730 (1991).

The banking and financial division, in consultation with the state banking board, should adopt rules that allow state-chartered banks to operate efficiently and in conformity with the standards and procedures governing national banks. The department shall also adopt rules governing the combination of obligations for lending limit calculation purposes. The rules should address the purpose of the loan, the ultimate common user of funds, the source of repayment, the percentage of ownership, and other relevant considerations.

The rules on loan limitations may include limits or requirements for particular classes or categories of loans or extensions of credit, including a rule governing the combination of obligations for lending limit calculation purposes. These rules may address the purpose of the loan, the ultimate user of the funds, the source of repayment, the percentage of ownership of the entity, and other relevant considerations. Procedurally Improper and Unsubstantiated Claim of Bank Alteration of Records: In an attorney's action against a bank for breach of a covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the attorney filed a motion for summary judgment in which he for the first time claimed that the bank had altered his banking records and that the alterations made it liable as a matter of law and precluded summary judgment for the bank. He presented no evidence of alteration, did not modify his complaint to add the alteration claim, attempted to have his expert on the alleged alteration added to the witness list a month after the deadline for presentation of expert witness lists, and submitted, on appeal, letters from his expert that were not part of the record below. He presented no legal authority under which the bank's alleged actions and manner of keeping his records were illegal. It was not error to deny his motion. Cate v. Here, when the officer was assigned a mortgage on lands executed to the bank, the inadequacy of the value of the land as security for the mortgage was not alone sufficient to establish fraud. Commission for Procuring Loan: This section prohibiting a bank officer from receiving a commission for procuring a loan from the bank with which the officer is connected did not prohibit the bank from charging a commission for services rendered as an agent in procuring the loan from another bank. (See 1993 amendment.) Sullivan v. Mountain, 117 M 224, 160 P2d 447 (1945), explained in Noble v. Farmers Union Trading Co., 123 M 518, 216 P2d 925 (1950).

Case Notes

Acquiring Land on Mortgage Foreclosure: The value of land acquired on mortgage foreclosure sale was the amount of the bank's investment, not the amount at which it was carried on the bank's books after $2,000 of the debt due had been charged off as a loss. Charging items off the books as doubtful paper amounts only to reclassification of assets, and they may not be transferred or conveyed except for a valuable consideration. Johnson v. Kaiser, 104 M 261, 65 P2d 1179 (1937).

Buying Through Third Person: Where bank president, acting for the bank, executed a quitclaim deed to a third person for $1 consideration, who in turn executed a like deed to the president for a like consideration, judgment declaring the transaction void was affirmed under the facts considered. Johnson v. Kaiser, 104 M 261, 65 P2d 1179 (1937).

Setting Aside Transfer: An officer dealing privately with the bank acts in a fiduciary relation calling for the utmost fairness and candor, and when attacked the burden is on him to show dealings were fair and honest. Disputable presumptions that a person is innocent of wrong, transactions have been fair and legal, ordinary course of business has been followed, and the law has been obeyed, relied upon by defendant in action to set aside fraudulent conveyance, fade away in the face of contrary facts satisfactorily established. Johnson v. Kaiser, 104 M 261, 65 P2d 1179 (1937).

When such loan or a loan made to a director of such bank, banking institution, or trust company exceeds in amount 10% of its capital stock, it shall not be made until first approved by a majority of the directors of such bank, banking institution, or trust company, which approval shall be entered upon the records of such bank, and the signatures of a majority of the board of directors approving same shall be attached thereto and be and remain a permanent record of such bank."

The legislature intends that rules be adopted by the state banking board to govern the processes and procedures for both issuing a charter and for suspending or revoking a charter for a foreign capital depository. Because the department of commerce [now department of administration] bears responsibility for the regulation and supervision of a foreign capital depository, the legislature finds it prudent to delegate rulemaking authority to that department with respect to the conduct of examinations and inspections, for mandatory reports, and for other related administrative matters. Because the financial privacy of depository customers must be afforded the highest protection possible within the parameters of state and federal law and because an applicant for a depository charter must be provided a readily discernable combination of certainty and flexibility with respect to the services provided by a depository, a blanket delegation of rulemaking authority is not granted to either the board or the department."

(a) Each Sunday;
(b) New Year's Day, January 1;
(c) Memorial Day, the last Monday in May;
(d) Independence Day, July 4;

(h) On such days as banks are closed in accordance with 32-1-561 to 32-1-565, as amended.

(2) Any bank practicing Saturday closing in compliance with law may remain closed and refrain from the transaction of business on Saturdays, notwithstanding that a Saturday may coincide with a legal holiday other than one of the holidays designated above for banks practicing Saturday closing in compliance with law, and provided further that it shall be optional for any bank, whether practicing Saturday closing or not, to observe as a holiday and to be closed on any day upon which a general election is held throughout the state of Montana and on Veterans' Day, November 11, and on any local holiday which historically or traditionally or by proclamation of a local executive official or governing body is established as a day upon which businesses are generally closed in the community in which the bank is located."

It is the intention of the legislature that the Department of Commerce [now Department of Administration] review with banks and related interests, where possible, problems related to the retention of bank records. Notice of Meetings — Prescribed Method to Be Followed: When the mode of giving notice of a corporation's meetings is prescribed by statute or its bylaws and a stockholder is not notified in accordance therewith, the action of the meeting is not binding upon him, as only strict compliance with the prescribed method will suffice. Here, section 6109(d), R.C.M. 1921 (now repealed), and a state bank's bylaws required written notice to its stockholders of a special meeting to devise ways of making good an impairment of the bank's capital stock. Notice was required to be mailed to the stockholder's last known residence. Notice was mailed to the stockholder's attorney who resided in a different city. The stockholder did not participate in the meeting. A sale of his stock on nonpayment of an assessment levied against it pursuant to action taken at the meeting was void. Case Notes

Liquidating Officer Distinguished From Receiver: Except when the statute provides otherwise, the liquidating officer of an insolvent bank is not required to consult the court in charge of the liquidation; he acts as a state officer by authority of the statute and not by virtue of an appointment by the court, and in this respect his status differs from that of a receiver. Merchants Nat'l Bank Bldg. v. Farmers St. Bank of Cut Bank, 111 M 559, 111 P2d 806 (1941).

Venue of Action Against Liquidating Officer to Enforce Payment of Claim: An action against the liquidating officer of an insolvent bank based upon his refusal to pay an adjudicated claim against the bank was properly commenced in the county where payment was refused. Merchants Nat'l Bank Bldg. v. Farmers St. Bank of Cut Bank, 111 M 559, 111 P2d 806 (1941).

Unauthorized Sale of Assets: The receiver or liquidating officer of a state bank being merely an administrative officer of the court appointing him has no original or inherent authority, but whatever power he possesses comes from the court or from statute or such as may reasonably or necessarily be implied from such orders or statutes by which his express power is defined. Parcells v. Price, 110 M 537, 104 P2d 12 (1940).

Case Notes

Trust Funds — Preferences: A sum of money was delivered to a bank under a trust agreement providing that interest thereon should be paid to two trustees for the benefit of the prison band. The trustees were, under this section, parties in interest who could on the insolvency of the bank bring action to have the amount of the principal trust fund allowed as a preferred claim, even though the claim was filed with the Superintendent of Banks (now Department of Administration) in the name of the creator of the trust. Conley v. Johnson, 101 M 376, 54 P2d 585 (1936).

Duty to Inform of Allowance of Claim: When a creditor of an insolvent bank asserts that his claim against it is a preferred one and the Superintendent of Banks (now Department of Administration) acting as liquidating officer of such bank rejects it, he should advise the claimant that the claim will be allowed as a general one. In this case an action was brought to compel allowance of the claim as preferred. The liquidating officer did not state at the hearing that the claim would be allowed as a general claim. It was improper under these circumstances to award costs to the liquidating officer, although he was awarded judgment. Powell Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Larabie Bros. Bankers, Inc., 100 M 183, 46 P2d 697 (1935).

Time Within Which Action to Be Commenced: One dissatisfied with the action of the Superintendent of Banks (now Department of Administration) acting as liquidating officer of an insolvent bank in rejecting his alleged preferred claim against the bank must bring action within 90 days after service of notice of such rejection. Notice to attorneys is notice to claimant, and an action not begun until after the expiration of the 90-day period cannot be maintained. Caterpillar Tractor Co. v. Johnson, 99 M 269, 43 P2d 670 (1935).

Funds Held at Court's Order: The receiver of an insolvent bank was directed by the court to hold money collected upon checks and drafts not received for collection until after the close of the bank in a special fund until the right of the claimant thereto could be determined. The successful claimant was not entitled to interest on the funds while in the hands of the receiver. St. v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 74 M 491, 241 P 626 (1925).

1993 Amendment: Chapter 395 in (1)(d), after "certified checks", deleted "contractual liabilities"; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Preferred Claim, What Constitutes:

To constitute a preferred claim to funds in an insolvent bank, transaction must create relation of principal and agent between depositor and the bank and not that of creditor and debtor. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. R.R. v. Larabie Bros. Bankers, Inc., 103 M 126, 61 P2d 823 (1936).

A state bank exercising the powers of a trust company has specific authority to receive money in trust and may allow an agreed rate of interest thereon. Such funds maintain a preference claim upon insolvency of a bank. Conley v. Johnson, 101 M 376, 54 P2d 585 (1936).

Liquidating Officer as Fiduciary: The state Superintendent of Banks (now Department of Administration), as statutory trustee of the assets of a closed bank, has the duty to administer the trust with utmost honesty and good faith. He must use reasonable skill, diligence, and discretion on behalf of depositors first and stockholders second. When he defaults in this duty, liability arises in favor of depositor-creditors which cannot be nullified by the court. No payment can be made to stockholders until depositors are paid in full. Binsfield v. Johnson, 6 F. Supp. 29 (D.C. Mont. 1934).

Method of Collection Determinative: Plaintiff had been a depositor in Columbus State Bank for many years and during that time had permitted the bank to make collections on negotiable paper purchased by him from the bank. The bank would credit his account, and he would receive a duplicate deposit slip. He did not object to having a mortgage note on livestock, which gave rise to this action, handled in the same manner. These facts were sufficient to support a finding that the method pursued by plaintiff established him as a general creditor and that the deposit under the mortgage did not constitute a trust fund. In re Columbus St. Bank, 95 M 332, 26 P2d 643 (1933).

Customary Practice Determinative: A foreign company employed a local bank to act as its collecting agent in the community in which the bank did business. It directed the bank to make remittances by draft every third day, without requesting that it hold the funds intact in the meantime. It was presumed that the corporation had knowledge of the well-known custom of banks to mingle the collections with the other funds of the bank. This resulted in a general and not a special deposit. The relation of debtor and creditor was thereby created, depriving the creditor of the right to claim a preference upon the bank's becoming insolvent. Montana-Dakota Power Co. v. Johnson, 95 M 16, 23 P2d 956 (1933).

Transfer of Assets Due to Impairment: A bank in need of funds to make good an impairment of its capital stock transferred certain questionable assets to its vice-president at their face value. He in accordance with a resolution of the directors secured a loan on his note, which was guaranteed by certain stockholders of the bank. The money was placed to the bank's credit. The transaction was not an absolute sale of the assets. The guaranteeing stockholder bringing this suit was entitled to reimbursement by the bank or, upon its suspension, to have his claim as one of its general creditors approved by the receiver. Lyon v. Featherman, 80 M 504, 261 P 268 (1927).

Special Deposit Must Be Indicated: A deposit in a bank of trust funds, known to the bank to be such, there being nothing, however, to indicate that it is intended as a special deposit, does not of itself make the bank a trustee of the fund for the benefit of the cestui que trust. The cestui que trust has no preference over the general creditors of the bank in case of its suspension. The deposit is a general one of which the bank becomes the owner. The transaction creates the relationship of debtor and creditor between the bank and the depositor. Montana-Wyoming Ass'n of Credit Men v. Commercial Nat'l Bank, 80 M 174, 259 P 1060 (1927).

Tracing of Funds: A promissory note was left with a bank for collection prior to its insolvency. Collection on the note was made. The owner sought to establish a preference claim for the amount of the collection on the theory that it constituted a trust fund. So long as it can be shown that a balance equal to the trust fund remains in the bank, the money collected was retained by it, and the money constituted an integral part of the bank's money which passed into the hands of the receiver, the claim is established. McDonald v. Am. Bank & Trust Co., 79 M 233, 255 P 733 (1927).

Depositor as Creditor: A general depositor in a bank is merely a general creditor and is not entitled to any preference over other general creditors when the bank becomes insolvent or goes into voluntary liquidation. Rohr v. Stanton Trust & Sav. Bank, 76 M 248, 245 P 947 (1926).

Trust Funds: A deposit of trust funds with the knowledge of the bank that they are such does not in and of itself make the deposit a special deposit. Deposits for a specified time for which the bank issues a certificate of deposit constitute general deposits. Upon the failure of the bank, the depositor becomes a general creditor. Pethybridge v. First St. Bank of Livingston, 75 M 173, 243 P 569 (1926), followed in Lashorn v. First St. Bank of Livingston, 75 M 184, 243 P 573 (1926).

Principal and Agent Relationship Required: A person seeking to establish a preference claim to funds in the hands of the receiver of an insolvent bank must show that the transaction upon which he relies created the relation of principal and agent. He must show that by the transaction, the assets of the bank were augmented and be able to trace the trust fund into the possession of the bank. Failure to show either one of these conditions defeats his action. Calif. Packing Corp. v. McClintock, 75 M 72, 241 P 1077 (1925), followed in McDonald v. Am. Bank & Trust Co., 79 M 233, 255 P 733 (1927), and Montana-Dakota Power Co. v. Johnson, 95 M 16, 23 P2d 956 (1933).

Creation of Trust Relationship: A draft was forwarded to a bank for collection, with instructions to remit the proceeds upon collection. When the amount was collected, the relation of agent and principal and not that of debtor and creditor existed between the bank and the owner. The collection and retention of the money by the bank created the relationship of trustee and beneficiary. The beneficiary was entitled, upon the bank becoming insolvent, to a preferential right to the proceeds, provided he could show the proceeds augmented the bank's assets and could trace the proceeds into the hands of the receiver. Hawaiian Pineapple Co. v. Browne, 69 M 140, 220 P 1114 (1923).

Case Notes

Liquidating Officer — Distinguished From Receiver: The liquidating officer of an insolvent bank is not required to consult the court in charge of the liquidation, except where the statute provides otherwise. The liquidating officer differs from a receiver in that he acts as a state officer by authority of statute and not by virtue of an appointment by the court. Merchants Nat'l Bank Bldg. v. Farmers St. Bank of Cut Bank, 111 M 559, 111 P2d 806 (1941).

When Stockholders' Liability Enforceable: The assets of an insolvent bank were insufficient to pay all its liabilities. The receiver in charge enforced the stockholders' liability under section 6036, R.C.M. 1921 (now repealed). This could be done before all the assets of the bank had been disposed of and the proceeds applied toward the satisfaction of creditors' claims. Skarie v. Marron, 78 M 295, 253 P 895 (1927).

Part 7
Uniform Common Trust Act

Part Commissioners' Note

A common trust fund is a group of securities set aside by a trustee for investment by two or more trusts operated by the same trustee. It is almost invariably used by banks and trust companies, and not by individual trustees.

The purposes of such a common or joint investment fund are to diversify the investments of the several trusts and thus spread the risk of loss, and to make it easy to invest any amount of trust funds quickly and with a small amount of trouble.

Such a common trust fund cannot legally be operated without statutory sanction, because its operation involves a mixture of trust funds which was not permitted by doctrines of equity. There is a strong sentiment among trust men that the great utility of these common trust funds justifies a statutory exception to the rule regarding the mixture of two or more trust funds.

The Uniform Common Trust Fund Act is a simple enabling statute suitable for adoption by any state which is willing to permit banks and trust companies to set up one or more common trust funds. The Uniform Act does not set out in detail the restrictions on the operation of such common trust funds, except that they must be composed of investments legal for trusts in that state. The reason for not covering in this proposed Uniform State Act the details of the operation of such a common trust fund is that as a practical matter such details are covered by the regulations issued by the Federal Reserve Board which went into effect December 31, 1937.

The Federal Revenue Act of 1936, §169 [see 26 U.S.C.A.Int.Rev. Code §584] provides that a common trust fund shall be taxed as an association on its income unless it is operated in accordance with the regulations issued by the Federal Reserve Board. Consequently, every bank or trust company, whether a national or a state institution, will have to operate its common trust funds in accordance with the Federal Reserve Board regulations if it wants to escape the federal corporation income tax, and the difference between such tax and the individual income taxes assessed against the different beneficiaries of the trusts would be so great that no trustee could afford to operate its fund otherwise than in accordance with the Federal Reserve Board regulations.

Therefore, the passage by a state of the Uniform Common Trust Fund Act will enable banks and trust companies in that state to set up one or more common trust funds composed entirely of legal trust investments for its fiduciary funds, these common trust funds necessarily being subject to restrictions and regulations of the Federal Reserve Board as they exist from time to time.

Part Case Notes

Unequal Taxation Not Discrimination: A building and loan association is "a corporation, mutually operated, for the purpose of encouraging home building and thrift among its shareholders, and loaning substantially all of its funds to them on real estate mortgage security". The state may, if it sees fit, favor such associations in levying taxes, as a matter of public policy, without such action being regarded as unfriendly discrimination against national banks. A building and loan association does not make loans with a view to a sale of the notes and reinvestments, as in the investment features of banking, and hence its capital is not competing moneyed capital within the meaning of 12 U.S.C.A. §548. Case Notes Statute Unconstitutional: This section granting the Department of Business Regulation (now Department of Administration) the power to approve or disapprove applications for merger of savings and loan associations is unconstitutional as it delegates legislative authority without providing standards or guidelines either expressed or otherwise ascertainable. This defect was not cured by the Department's supplying standards to govern the hearing on an application when there were no statutory standards or guidelines from which the Department could extrapolate new ones. In re Gate City S&L Ass'n, 182 M 361, 597 P2d 84 (1979); Gate City S&L Ass'n v. Pitts, 166 M 411, 533 P2d 1083 (1975).

Approval of Merger — Justiciable Controversy: Approval of proposed merger of savings and loan institutions by the Director of the Department of Business Regulation (now Department of Administration) prior to approval of merger by Federal Home Loan Bank Board does not render the decision of the Director a nonjusticiable controversy. Gate City S&L Ass'n v. Pitts, 166 M 411, 533 P2d 1083 (1975).

Approval of Shareholders: There is nothing in this section to indicate that the approval of the shareholders must precede the consent of the Director of the Department of Business Regulation (now Department of Administration), nor alternatively, that the Director's consent must precede the shareholders' vote. Gate City S&L Ass'n v. Pitts, 166 M 411, 533 P2d 1083 (1975).

Merger With Out-of-State Association: A North Dakota chartered savings and loan association may merge with two Montana chartered savings and loan associations and maintain their separate existing facilities. (See subsection (2) as amended in 1977.) Gate City S&L Ass'n v. Pitts, 166 M 411, 533 P2d 1083 (1975).

Attorney General's Opinions

Branching Prohibited: Citing 32-1-372, the Attorney General held that a domestic building and loan association is not authorized under our statutes to establish a branch office. (This section as amended in 1977 now expressly prohibits branching between a building and loan association chartered in Montana by the state and one chartered by any other state. In 1981, the Legislature granted all the rights of federally chartered savings and loan associations to state chartered building and loans. This presumably includes the right to branch.) 29 A.G. Op. 2 (1961).

Case Notes

Addition of Name to Signature Card Not Proof of Intent to Make Gift: The plaintiff added her nephew's name to a joint tenancy signature card for her bank checking account to facilitate the administration of her estate upon her death. All money in the account was deposited by the plaintiff, who exercised exclusive control over the account. The plaintiff transferred money from the account to her nephew and his wife, who used the sums to purchase real estate. After her nephew died, the plaintiff sought to secure title to the real property when her nephew's wife refused to repay the money the plaintiff had given the couple and which she considered a loan to them. The defendant, who is plaintiff's nephew's widow, contended the money was a gift to the couple. However, the plaintiff testified at length that the money was intended as a loan to her nephew. The addition of her nephew's name to the signature card of her checking account was not sufficient evidence to overcome the plaintiff's testimony that there was no donative intent. When a depositor during her lifetime raises the issue of ownership of funds in a joint tenancy account, the statements on the signature card are not conclusive and additional evidence may be examined to ascertain the true intent of the parties. To constitute a gift, the addition of a party's signature to a bank account signature card must satisfy all the requirements of a gift inter vivos: delivery, donative intent, and acceptance by the donee. The signature cards of joint tenancy accounts are forms containing language drafted by the depository institution and may not accurately express the intentions and relationships between the joint tenants. Case Notes

No Conflict Between Sections: Section 15-31-102, prior to its amendment by Ch. 155, L. 1961, respecting corporations exempt from the provisions of the corporation license tax included domestic building and loan associations. This provision was deleted by amendment. Section 7-122, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), contained a provision reading: "Associations organized under or controlled by this act shall be subject to taxation in no other way." Section 7-159, R.C.M. 1947 (now 32-2-420(2), MCA), read: "Insofar as the provisions of this act are inconsistent with the provisions of any other law governing building and loan associations, the provisions of this act shall control." Plaintiff contended this language precluded the imposition of any other type of tax than that prescribed in section 7-122, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed). The court held that section 7-122, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), was a statute for classification of property of building and loan associations for property tax purposes only and was limited to that sphere. The court held that there was no conflict between the R.C.M. 1947 sections 7-122, 7-159 (now 32-2-420(2), MCA), and 84-1501 (now 15-31-102, MCA). (Annotator's comment: Section 7-159, R.C.M. 1947 (now 32-2-420(2), MCA), was enacted as sec. 2, Ch. 35, L. 1945. The only other section contained in Ch. 35, L. 1945, was section 1 of that chapter which is now 32-2-420(1), MCA (formerly section 7-158, R.C.M. 1947). It appears that sec. 2, Ch. 35, L. 1945, when referring to "this act" meant the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 and not the entire building and loan association law as implied in this case note. Pursuant to 1-11-204, the Code Commissioner changed the word "act" to "section" during recodification to accurately reflect the applicability of sec. 2, Ch. 35, L. 1945.) Case Notes

Addition of Name to Signature Card Not Proof of Intent to Make Gift: The plaintiff added her nephew's name to a joint tenancy signature card for her bank checking account to facilitate the administration of her estate upon her death. All money in the account was deposited by the plaintiff, who exercised exclusive control over the account. The plaintiff transferred money from the account to her nephew and his wife, who used the sums to purchase real estate. After her nephew died, the plaintiff sought to secure title to the real property when her nephew's wife refused to repay the money the plaintiff had given the couple and which she considered a loan to them. The defendant, who is plaintiff's nephew's widow, contended the money was a gift to the couple. However, the plaintiff testified at length that the money was intended as a loan to her nephew. The addition of her nephew's name to the signature card of her checking account was not sufficient evidence to overcome the plaintiff's testimony that there was no donative intent. When a depositor during her lifetime raises the issue of ownership of funds in a joint tenancy account, the statements on the signature card are not conclusive and additional evidence may be examined to ascertain the true intent of the parties. To constitute a gift, the addition of a party's signature to a bank account signature card must satisfy all the requirements of a gift inter vivos: delivery, donative intent, and acceptance by the donee. The signature cards of joint tenancy accounts are forms containing language drafted by the depository institution and may not accurately express the intentions and relationships between the joint tenants. Administrative Rules

ARM 2.59.319 Required procedure for closing a consumer loan business.

Case Notes

Implied Private Right of Action Under Consumer Loan Act: The Montana Consumer Loan Act (CLA) does not specifically provide for or prohibit a private right of action. Defendant contended that 32-5-401 provides that the Department of Administration is the sole entity authorized to seek a violation of the CLA in the courts. Plaintiffs argued that the remedy provisions of the CLA indicated a legislative intent consistent with allowing a private right of action because the remedy of violating a loan benefits the borrower. The Supreme Court agreed with plaintiffs that the CLA's remedial measures were not inconsistent with allowing a private right of action under the CLA. If only the Department of Administration could take action to enforce the CLA, there would be no need for 32-5-407 providing that a party could be awarded attorney fees in an action on a contract entered pursuant to the CLA, and if the Legislature had wished to prohibit a private cause of action, it could have done so. Wombold v. Associates Financial Serv. Co. of Mont., Inc., 2004 MT 397, 325 M 290, 104 P3d 1080 (2004).

Points Charged as Flat Fee on Loans Not Considered Interest — Charging Unauthorized Fees Violative of Consumer Loan Act: A lender charged a loan fee, called points, upon the origination of real estate-secured loans. The lender contended that the points were considered interest on the loan and were thus permissible under the Montana Consumer Loan Act (CLA). The Supreme Court disagreed. Interest is generally defined as a charge made for the use, forbearance, or detention of money. A flat fee front-loaded into a loan, computed as a percentage of the loan but bearing no direct relation to actual costs of specific services performed and which did not constitute a charge for use of the lender's money over time, is not interest, but rather is a fee charged by the lender for making the loan. Such fees are not authorized by the CLA and are thus prohibited. To protect borrowers, the court declined to interpret the CLA in a way that contains a loophole whereby predatory lenders could add points onto the beginning of an interest-bearing loan and thereby escape the requirement that the points be at least partially refunded if the loan is prepaid or refinanced. (Fees addressed in 2007 amendment.) Wombold v. Associates Financial Serv. Co. of Mont., Inc., 2004 MT 397, 325 M 290, 104 P3d 1080 (2004).

Except as provided in subsection (3), other fees may not be charged for default or extension of the contract by the borrower"; in (4) substituted current language for former (4) that read: "(4) The licensee may include in the principal amount of any loan:

(a) the actual fees paid a public official or agency of the state for filing, recording, or releasing any instrument securing the loan;

(b) the premium for insurance in lieu of filing or recording any instrument securing the loan to the extent that the premium does not exceed the fees that would otherwise be payable for filing, recording, or releasing any instrument securing the loan;

2010 Amendment by Initiative: Initiative Measure No. 164, proposed by initiative petition and approved at the general election held November 2, 2010, in (1) in first sentence after "receive" inserted "interest" and at end deleted "interest as provided under 31-1-112", and inserted second sentence relating to the interest rate that may not be exceeded.

Findings: Section 1, Initiative Measure No. 164, provided: "The people of Montana find that some lenders are charging Montanans over 400% interest annually, that excessive interest rates can lead Montana families into a debt trap of repeat borrowing, that the United States congress has enacted laws capping interest rates on loans to military families at 36% annually, and that responsible small loans are available at interest rates of 36% annually or less."

Effective Date: Section 9, Initiative Measure No. 164, provided: "[This act] applies to all transactions governed hereby entered into on or after January 1, 2011."

2007 Amendment: Chapter 372 in (1) near beginning after "A licensee" deleted "or holder of a supplementary license under this part" and after "interest" deleted "charges"; deleted former (2) and (3) that read: "(2) Charges in subsection (1) must be computed at the applicable rates on the full, original principal amount of the loan from the date of the loan to the due date of the final scheduled installment irrespective of the fact that the loan is payable in installments. The charges must be added to the principal of the loan and may not be discounted or deducted from the principal or paid or received at the time the loan is made. For the purpose of computing charges for a fraction of a month, a day is considered one-thirtieth of a month.

(3) (a) When any loan contract, new loan, renewal, or otherwise for a period of not more than 61 months is paid in full by cash 1 month or more before the final installment date, the licensee shall refund or credit the borrower with that portion of the total charges that is due the borrower as determined by schedules prepared under the rule of 78ths or sum of the digits principle as follows: the amount of the refund or credit must be as great a proportion of the total charges originally contracted for as the sum of the consecutive monthly balances of the contract scheduled to follow the date of prepayment bears to the sum of all the consecutive monthly balances of the contract, both sums to be determined according to the payment schedule originally contracted for.

(b) When any loan contract, new loan, renewal, or otherwise for a period of more than 61 months is paid in full by cash 1 month or more before the final installment date, the licensee shall refund or credit the borrower with that portion of the total charges that is due the borrower that is applicable to all fully unexpired months in the contract as originally scheduled or, if deferred, as deferred, following the date of prepayment. For this purpose the applicable charge is the charge that would have been earned for that contract if charges had not been precomputed, by applying to the unpaid principal balance, by the actuarial method, the annual percentage rate disclosed pursuant to federal law, based on the assumption that all payments were made as originally scheduled. For all loans that may be subject to this section, charges are computed initially in the same manner used to determine the annual percentage rate"; in (2) in second sentence at end inserted "not to exceed $50", in third sentence inserted "The fee charged for any past-due", and inserted fourth sentence containing exception and prohibiting other fees for default or extension of contract; inserted (3) regarding deferral and other fees; in (4)(c) at beginning substituted "bona fide fees or charges" for "The licensee may include in the principal amount of any loan bona fide charges"; in (5)(a) in first sentence at beginning substituted "Other fees" for "Further or other charges", in second sentence near middle and in third sentence in two places substituted "fees" for "charges", and in third sentence after "or received" deleted "except as the result of an accidental and bona fide error of computation"; inserted (5)(b) regarding inapplication of section to fees for certain services; deleted former (7), (8), and (9) that read: "(7) Subsections (2) and (3) apply only to loans on which charges are made on an add-on basis and do not apply to loans on which charges are made on an interest-bearing basis. The contracting for, charging of, receiving of, or financing of loan origination fees, points, or prepaid finance charges on a loan on which other charges are made on an interest-bearing basis does not make the loan subject to being considered an add-on basis loan.

(8) If a consumer loan is prepaid in whole or in part for any reason, including after a default, prior to the final payment due date and the amount of prepayment exceeds 10% of the then-outstanding principal balance of the loan, a licensee may charge a prepayment charge as follows:

(a) 10% of the then-outstanding principal balance of the loan if the prepayment occurs during the first 6 months after the date of the loan;

(b) 7% of the then-outstanding principal balance of the loan if the prepayment occurs more than 6 months after the date of the loan, but on or before 18 months after the date of the loan; or

(c) 3.5% of the then-outstanding principal balance of the loan if the prepayment occurs more than 18 months after the date of the loan, but before 61 months after the date of the loan.

(9) A prepayment charge may not be collected if:

(a) the prepayment results solely because of the enforcement of a "due on sale" clause in a real estate mortgage or deed of trust that secures the loan;

(b) the loan provided is prepaid by another loan made by the same licensee or an affiliate of the licensee; or

(c) prepayment occurs as a result of a payment made by a credit life insurance policy or other insurance policy"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2008.

2005 Amendment: Chapter 125 in (6) at end of third sentence after "licensee" substituted "shall forfeit to the borrower a sum that is double the amount that is in excess of the charges authorized by this chapter" for "may not collect or receive any charges"; in (7) near beginning of first sentence after "(3)" deleted "and (6) of this section" and inserted second sentence providing that contracting for, charging of, receiving of, or financing of loan origination fees, points, or prepaid finance charges on a loan on which other charges are made on an interest-bearing basis does not make the loan subject to being considered an add-on basis loan; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 24, 2005.

Retroactive Applicability — Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 125, L. 2005, provided: "[This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to loans subject to [this act] made on or after October 1, 1985, the effective date of Chapter 406, L. 1985."

(2) [This act] does not apply to loans that are the subject of a lawsuit filed prior to [the effective date of this act]." Chapter 125 effective March 24, 2005. Chapter 272 effective April 19, 2005.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 308 in (4) substituted "the greater of 5% of the amount past due or $15" for "5% of the amount past due". Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 270 inserted (8) outlining guidelines for prepayment charges on consumer loans; inserted (9) outlining when prepayment charge may not be collected; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 198 inserted (5)(a)(ii) authorizing a licensee to include an insurance premium in the principal amount of a loan; and made minor changes in style.

1985 Amendments: Chapter 168 deleted former (4) that read: "On loans of $90 or less a licensee may charge, in lieu of charges specified in (1) of this section, not in excess of $1 for each $5 of cash or credit advanced to the borrower up to the amount of $90. A period of at least 15 days must be allowed for the repayment of each $5 cash or credit advanced. Such charges cannot be assessed by any subterfuge or device on any loan over $90 or on any balance of $90 or less when the original loan was greater than $90"; in (6) deleted former third sentence that read: "All balances due to a licensee from any person as a borrower or as an endorser, guarantor, or surety for any borrower or otherwise or due from any husband or wife, jointly or severally, shall be considered a part of any loan being made by a licensee to such person for the purpose of computing interest or charges"; and corrected internal subsection references.

Chapter 406 in (1) substituted language allowing a licensee or holder of a supplementary license to contract for and receive interest charges as provided in 31-1-112 for "Every licensee hereunder may contract for and receive on any loan of money not exceeding $1,000 in principal amount:

(a) charges at rates not in excess of $20 per year per $100 on that part of the principal amount of the loan not exceeding $500;

(b) $16 per year per $100 on that part of the principal amount of the loan exceeding $500 but not exceeding $1,000"; deleted former (2) that read: "The holder of a supplementary license may contract for and receive charges at rates authorized for licensees in subsection (1) for the first $1,000 of the principal amount of any loan and may contract for and receive charges at rates not in excess of $12 per year per $100 on that part of the principal amount of any loan exceeding $1,000 but not exceeding $7,500"; in (2) after "(1)" deleted "and (2)"; deleted former (4) (see Ch. 168 amendment note for text); inserted (7) providing that subsections (2), (3), and (6) apply only to loans made on add-on basis; and deleted former (9) through (13) that read: "(9) On any loan of money exceeding $7,500 in principal amount, a licensee may not make charges as provided in subsections (1) and (2) but shall make charges in accordance with the provisions of this subsection through subsection (12).

(10) On any loan of money exceeding $7,500 in principal amount, a licensee may contract and receive charges at a rate not in excess of 2% per month on the principal amount as follows:

(a) Charges shall be computed on unpaid balances of the principal amount outstanding from time to time for the actual time outstanding. Each payment shall be applied first to accumulated charges and the remainder of the payment applied to the unpaid principal balance, except that if the amount of the payment is insufficient to pay the accumulated charges, unpaid charges continue to accumulate to be paid from the proceeds of subsequent payments and are not added to the principal balance.

(b) Charges made under this subsection may not be payable in advance or compounded. However, if part or all of the consideration for a new loan contract is the unpaid principal balance of a prior loan, the principal amount payable under such new loan contract may include any unpaid charges which have accrued. The resulting loan contract is a new and separate loan transaction for all purposes. The principal balance of a prior loan on which charges have been made pursuant to subsections (1) and (2) is the balance due after refund or credit is given to the borrower pursuant to subsection (5).

(11) For purposes of computing charges for a fraction of a month, a day is considered one-thirtieth of a month.

(12) The provisions of subsections (5) and (6) do not apply to loans made under subsections (9) through (11).

(13) The amounts of $90, $500, $1,000, and $7,500 in subsections (1), (2), (4), (9), and (10) are subject to change pursuant to the provisions of 32-5-104 on adjustment of dollar amounts".

Saving Clause: Chapter 406, L. 1985, which amended this section, included a saving clause that read: "Section 9. Saving clause. This act does not affect rights and duties that matured, penalties that were incurred, or proceedings that were begun before the effective date of this act."

Case Notes

Arbitration Clause in Payday Loan Agreement Found Unconscionable: The defendant charged the plaintiff 780% annual interest on a payday loan. The loan agreement included an arbitration clause that purportedly governed the validity of the agreement to arbitrate disputes. The plaintiff brought a class action suit against the defendant for charging an annual interest rate in excess of the 36% authorized by 32-5-301, among other claims. The defendant tried to compel arbitration, but the District Court found that the arbitration clause was unenforceable and denied the request. The Supreme Court found that generally applicable contract law governs the validity of an arbitration clause, and it applied the same analysis for unconscionability of arbitration clauses as for unconscionability of contracts generally. The court found that the arbitration clause was unenforceable because it qualified as a contract of adhesion and unreasonably favored the defendant, resulting in an unconscionable provision. Kelker v. Geneva-Roth Ventures, Inc., 2013 MT 62, 369 Mont. 254, 303 P.3d 777.

Implied Private Right of Action Under Consumer Loan Act: The Montana Consumer Loan Act (CLA) does not specifically provide for or prohibit a private right of action. Defendant contended that 32-5-401 provides that the Department of Administration is the sole entity authorized to seek a violation of the CLA in the courts. Plaintiffs argued that the remedy provisions of the CLA indicated a legislative intent consistent with allowing a private right of action because the remedy of violating a loan benefits the borrower. The Supreme Court agreed with plaintiffs that the CLA's remedial measures were not inconsistent with allowing a private right of action under the CLA. If only the Department of Administration could take action to enforce the CLA, there would be no need for 32-5-407 providing that a party could be awarded attorney fees in an action on a contract entered pursuant to the CLA, and if the Legislature had wished to prohibit a private cause of action, it could have done so. Wombold v. Associates Financial Serv. Co. of Mont., Inc., 2004 MT 397, 325 M 290, 104 P3d 1080 (2004).

Points Charged as Flat Fee on Loans Not Considered Interest — Charging Unauthorized Fees Violative of Consumer Loan Act: A lender charged a loan fee, called points, upon the origination of real estate-secured loans. The lender contended that the points were considered interest on the loan and were thus permissible under the Montana Consumer Loan Act (CLA). The Supreme Court disagreed. Interest is generally defined as a charge made for the use, forbearance, or detention of money. A flat fee front-loaded into a loan, computed as a percentage of the loan but bearing no direct relation to actual costs of specific services performed and which did not constitute a charge for use of the lender's money over time, is not interest, but rather is a fee charged by the lender for making the loan. Such fees are not authorized by the CLA and are thus prohibited. To protect borrowers, the court declined to interpret the CLA in a way that contains a loophole whereby predatory lenders could add points onto the beginning of an interest-bearing loan and thereby escape the requirement that the points be at least partially refunded if the loan is prepaid or refinanced. (See 2005 and 2007 amendments.) Wombold v. Associates Financial Serv. Co. of Mont., Inc., 2004 MT 397, 325 M 290, 104 P3d 1080 (2004).

Implied Private Right of Action Under Consumer Loan Act: The Montana Consumer Loan Act (CLA) does not specifically provide for or prohibit a private right of action. Defendant contended that this section provides that the Department of Administration is the sole entity authorized to seek a violation of the CLA in the courts. Plaintiffs argued that the remedy provisions of the CLA indicated a legislative intent consistent with allowing a private right of action because the remedy of violating a loan benefits the borrower. The Supreme Court agreed with plaintiffs that the CLA's remedial measures were not inconsistent with allowing a private right of action under the CLA. If only the Department of Administration could take action to enforce the CLA, there would be no need for 32-5-407 providing that a party could be awarded attorney fees in an action on a contract entered pursuant to the CLA, and if the Legislature had wished to prohibit a private cause of action, it could have done so. CHAPTER 6
ELECTRONIC FUNDS TRANSFER ACT

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Severability Clause: Section 23, Ch. 503, L. 1977, read: "If a part of this act is invalid, all valid parts that are severable from the invalid part remain in effect. If a part of this act is invalid in one or more of its applications, the part remains in effect in all valid applications that are severable from the invalid applications."

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent to Ch. 503, L. 1977 (SB 170), approved by the House Committee on Business and Industry, read: "Since a section of this complex bill delegates authority to the Department of Business Regulation [now Department of Administration] to adopt rules necessary to effectuate and implement the act, the House Committee on Business and Industry submits this statement of the committee's intent and purpose for delegating this authority.

Electronic funds transfer is a new spin-off of computer technology into the banking industry. The industry favors electronic fund transfer systems (EFTS) because the checkless banking thus created will reduce the overhead costs of processing demand deposits—the check-clearing process. EFTS will also blur some of the legal distinctions between a bank, a savings and loan association, and a credit union. Thus, two highly detailed areas of law, the law of negotiable instruments and the laws which differentiate the roles of the various financial institutions, may be superseded in part by the advent of EFTS. Montana's branch banking law is also modified by SB 170. While the proposed bill addresses each of these modifications in considerable detail, the newness of the technology makes it impossible to anticipate and address every problem in a statute. Thus, the department will probably adopt rules to flesh out certain portions of the statute.

The definitions (section 3) have been amended in the House committee to permit a point-of-sale terminal in a store to be operated on either an instantaneous basis or a delayed-payment basis. The latter concept, called value-dating, is a tentative recommendation of the National Commission on Electronic Funds Transfer. As the National Commission's study progresses and more details of value-dating are worked out, the department may wish to adopt a rule to develop this definition under Montana law.

Under section 5, the bill deals with branching by limiting the placement of automated teller machines by banks and other financial institutions to the city where the institutions are located and a 3-mile fringe outside the city. Section 8 restates this limitation. Some federal savings and loan associations in Montana have branches in cities other than their home of operations. The department's rules may clarify that if such associations opt to participate in state-approved EFT systems, rather than develop their own systems under federal authorization, that they must abide by this geographical limitation when they offer EFTS services to their customers.

Section 6 deals with information which must be furnished to every consumer applying for an EFTS card. Rules of the department may specify size of type, bold-face type, etc., such as the Truth-in-Lending Act requires, for the presentation of this information.

Section 7 sets forth a mandatory sharing policy. The subcommittee which developed the House amendments to this bill is cognizant of the opposition to states' mandatory sharing policies by the U.S. Justice Department and the National Commission on EFT. Such views, based upon interpretations of the antitrust laws, have not been endorsed by the federal courts or Congress. A state's position, arguing that EFTS requires public utility-type regulation, may yet prevail with these final national authorities. In the event national policy should prohibit mandatory sharing laws, then the department would be expected to adopt rules for as much sharing as national policy would allow. Without sharing, the superior capital resources of the chain banks could allow them to monopolize the EFTS market.

Section 14 requires prior department approval for installation of an automated teller machine, based in part on a showing of adequate security provisions. The department would probably make rules in this area setting standards for alarm systems, human contact provisions in case of malfunction, etc. Section 18 permits the department to adopt a rule for a standard plastic card size. The new section 19 would allow the department to define, in a rule, a reasonable charge for conventional checking services, in case the banks move away from their current free-checking policies.

A few other rules may be adopted under other sections of the bill. This bill sets forth much more detailed regulation of EFTS than is found in the corresponding legislation of most other states, and the committee is satisfied that the volume of administrative rule-making will not be large under SB 170. As a guiding philosophy for all rulemaking activities, the committee expects the department to give consumer protection and safeguards the highest priority."

Case Notes

Conflict Between Workers' Compensation Statute and Administrative Rule — Fiscal Health Not Justification for Discrimination: Under 33-22-111, a workers' compensation claimant is entitled to freedom of choice in selecting a treating physician, but under ARM 24.29.1511, an injured worker cannot change physicians without the approval of the State Fund. The Workers' Compensation Court correctly found that pursuant to this section, the freedom of choice under 33-22-111 is not extended to workers' compensation cases. However, in reality, the exemption extends to cases involving coverage by the State Fund under Plan No. 1 or 3 but not to workers covered under Plan No. 2. The State Fund argued that the differentiation did not present an equal protection problem because the disparate treatment was rationally related to the legitimate governmental goal of controlling workers' compensation costs. The Supreme Court found that the policy of discriminating among injured workers based solely on which insurance plan supplied coverage was an equal protection violation because it was not rationally related to a legitimate government objective. Offering services to some while excluding others always results in lower costs, but cost control alone does not justify disparate treatment that violates an individual's right to equal protection of the law. Discrimination is not allowed merely for the sake of fiscal health. Heisler v. Hines Motor Co., 282 M 270, 937 P2d 45, 54 St. Rep. 345 (1997), distinguishing Stratemeyer v. Attorney General's Opinions

Health Service Corporations Versus Insurance Companies: Blue Cross and Blue Shield were nonprofit corporations pursuant to section 15-1401, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), and its successor provisions and operated nonprofit plans as set forth in 33-30-101. Therefore, they were not health insurance corporations under the Insurance Code but rather were a special legislative creation, health service corporations, exempt from the Insurance Code. 1983 Amendment: Inserted (7) defining resident domestic insurer.

Case Notes

Health Service Corporations Not Subject to Physician Liens: In 1987, the Legislature amended the insurance code to include health service corporations. The plaintiff sent a lien notice to the defendant that was ignored by the defendant, and the insurance proceeds were paid directly to the patient. The lower court ruled that the 1987 amendment to the insurance code made health service corporations subject to the physician lien statutes. The Supreme Court reversed, stating that the Legislature did not specifically state that it was subjecting health service corporations to the lien statutes and that therefore the Supreme Court would not presume that intention. (See 1991 amendment to 71-3-1113.) Anesthesiology, P.C. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 246 M 277, 806 P2d 16, 47 St. Rep. 2015 (1990).

Associations: Section 40-1301, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), expressly authorizing unincorporated associations organized under the laws of the United States, or any of its states or territories, to engage in the insurance business in Montana, was a special statute and such associations were, therefore, unaffected by the general one (27-28-101), providing that a civil action may be brought in the name of the State against an association which acts as a corporation without being legally incorporated. State ex rel. Intermtn. Lloyds v. Porter, 88 M 347, 294 P 363 (1930).

33-1-205. Definitions of kinds of insurance not mutually exclusive.

Case Notes

Accidental Death Coverage Considered Life Insurance for Purposes of Conversion Rights: Golt worked as a civilian employee of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) until he was discharged from employment in 1994 for cause. Thirty days after termination, Golt died of carbon monoxide poisoning. As a benefit of employment, Golt was covered by an accident insurance policy issued by General American Life Insurance Company (General), which provided that if he died while covered by the policy, his estate was eligible to receive $200,000. The policy also provided that coverage would terminate on the first premium due date after Golt ceased to be an employee, which in this case was 6 days after Golt was terminated from employment. The General policy also allowed the group accident policy to be converted to an individual policy within 31 days of discharge upon written application and payment of the first premium. In addition to the General policy, Golt was also insured by Aetna Life Insurance Company (Aetna) under a group life and accident and health insurance policy, which provided a life insurance benefit of $32,000 if Golt died from any cause while insured, plus an accidental death benefit of $32,000 in the event of Golt's accidental death. The Aetna policy provided that coverage ceased upon termination of employment, but allowed the group life insurance policy to be converted to individual life insurance within 31 days of discharge and provided that if Golt died during that period, benefits would be payable. AAFES transmitted the Aetna claim, which paid $32,000 under the life insurance provisions but denied the claim for accidental death benefits on grounds that the coverage ended when employment was terminated. AAFES did not transmit the General claim. A subsequent request for benefits from General was denied because the claim was not submitted within 20 days after the covered loss occurred. Golt's wife commenced an action in 1996 in federal court, seeking accidental death benefits from both Aetna and General. The federal District Court concluded that there was no coverage under either policy and entered final judgment in favor of the insurers. In 1999, the Supreme Court agreed to address three questions certified by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals pursuant to former Rule 44, M.R.App.P.

(now superseded), regarding the Montana statutory definitions of life insurance for purposes of determining an insured's conversions rights. The Supreme Court held that under this section, an insurance coverage may come within the definition of two kinds of insurance. Therefore, although accidental death coverage is disability insurance, for purposes of conversion rights, it is also life insurance as defined in 33-1-208. As life insurance, accidental death coverage is subject to a 31-day conversion right upon termination of coverage pursuant to 33-20-1209 and, in the event of death within the 31-day conversion period, is subject to automatic conversion under 33-20-1211. With regard to Golt's policies, the accidental death policy remained in effect, even when Golt died during the 31-day grace period without exercising the right to convert the policy by making application and paying the first premium. Golt v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 2000 MT 155, 300 M 142, 2 P3d 841, 57 St. Rep. 613 (2000).

Annuity Contract Considered Investment, Not Life Insurance: Miles invested $30,000 in a tax-deferred variable annuity contract. After Mile's death, the plaintiffs demanded one-half of the annuity investment on grounds that the annuity was life insurance that they were entitled to under Miles' will. The District Court denied their demand, holding that the annuity contract did not constitute insurance under Montana law. On appeal, the heirs cited In re Fligman's Estate, 113 M 505, 129 P2d 627 (1942), for the proposition that because annuity contracts were considered insurance for inheritance tax purposes in that case, it followed that annuity contracts have to be considered insurance for all purposes. The Supreme Court held that because the annuity contract in Miles' case did not involve indemnification, loss, damage, liability, or contingent events, it was an investment, not insurance, and the District Court did not err in so holding. In re Estate of Miles v. Miles, 2000 MT 41, 298 M 312, 994 P2d 1139, 57 St. Rep. 191 (2000).

Statutory Interpretation: This section does not allow one to simply categorize an accidental death policy as either a life insurance or disability policy; rather, the section reflects that the Legislature, cognizant of the fact that a particular policy may cover a variety of risks and therefore fall within more than one statutory category, wished to ensure that such a policy would not be considered void. Rodli v. Am. Bankers Ins. Co. of Fla., 44 St. Rep. 1888 (D.C. Mont. 1987) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

to individual life insurance within 31 days of discharge and provided that if Golt died during that period, benefits would be payable. AAFES transmitted the Aetna claim, which paid $32,000 under the life insurance provisions but denied the claim for accidental death benefits on grounds that the coverage ended when employment was terminated. AAFES did not transmit the General claim. A subsequent request for benefits from General was denied because the claim was not submitted within 20 days after the covered loss occurred. Golt's wife commenced an action in 1996 in federal court, seeking accidental death benefits from both Aetna and General. The federal District Court concluded that there was no coverage under either policy and entered final judgment in favor of the insurers. In 1999, the Supreme Court agreed to address three questions certified by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals pursuant to former Rule 44, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), regarding the Montana statutory definitions of life insurance for purposes of determining an insured's conversions rights. The Supreme Court held that under 33-1-205, an insurance coverage may come within the definition of two kinds of insurance. Therefore, although accidental death coverage is disability insurance, for purposes of conversion rights, it is also life insurance as defined in 33-1-208. As life insurance, accidental death coverage is subject to a 31-day conversion right upon termination of coverage pursuant to 33-20-1209 and, in the event of death within the 31-day conversion period, is subject to automatic conversion under 33-20-1211. With regard to Golt's policies, the accidental death policy remained in effect, even when Golt died during the 31-day grace period without exercising the right to convert the policy by making application and paying the first premium. Car Rental Accidental Death Policy as Disability Insurance: An insurance policy providing a renter of a car with coverage for accidental death arising from operation during the rental period was classified as disability insurance under this section, rather than life insurance under 33-1-208. Therefore, an "intoxicants exclusion" in the policy was not voided by the prohibition against such exclusions as related to life insurance policies under 33-20-121. Rodli v. Am. Bankers Ins. Case Notes

Accidental Death Coverage Considered Life Insurance for Purposes of Conversion Rights: Golt worked as a civilian employee of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) until he was discharged from employment in 1994 for cause. Thirty days after termination, Golt died of carbon monoxide poisoning. As a benefit of employment, Golt was covered by an accident insurance policy issued by General American Life Insurance Company (General), which provided that if he died while covered by the policy, his estate was eligible to receive $200,000. The policy also provided that coverage would terminate on the first premium due date after Golt ceased to be an employee, which in this case was 6 days after Golt was terminated from employment. The General policy also allowed the group accident policy to be converted to an individual policy within 31 days of discharge upon written application and payment of the first premium. In addition to the General policy, Golt was also insured by Aetna Life Insurance Company (Aetna) under a group life and accident and health insurance policy, which provided a life insurance benefit of $32,000 if Golt died from any cause while insured, plus an accidental death benefit of $32,000 in the event of Golt's accidental death. The Aetna policy provided that coverage ceased upon termination of employment, but allowed the group life insurance policy to be converted to individual life insurance within 31 days of discharge and provided that if Golt died during that period, benefits would be payable. AAFES transmitted the Aetna claim, which paid $32,000 under the life insurance provisions but denied the claim for accidental death benefits on grounds that the coverage ended when employment was terminated. AAFES did not transmit the General claim. A subsequent request for benefits from General was denied because the claim was not submitted within 20 days after the covered loss occurred. Golt's wife commenced an action in 1996 in federal court, seeking accidental death benefits from both Aetna and General. The federal District Court concluded that there was no coverage under either policy and entered final judgment in favor of the insurers. In 1999, the Supreme Court agreed to address three questions certified by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals pursuant to former Rule 44, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), regarding the Montana statutory definitions of life insurance for purposes of determining an insured's conversions rights. The Supreme Court held that under 33-1-205, an insurance coverage may come within the definition of two kinds of insurance. Therefore, although accidental death coverage is disability insurance, for purposes of conversion rights, it is also life insurance as defined in this section. As life insurance, accidental death coverage is subject to a 31-day conversion right upon termination of coverage pursuant to 33-20-1209 and, in the event of death within the 31-day conversion period, is subject to automatic conversion under 33-20-1211. With regard to Golt's policies, the accidental death policy remained in effect, even when Golt died during the 31-day grace period without exercising the right to convert the policy by making application and paying the first premium. Golt v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 2000 MT 155, 300 M 142, 2 P3d 841, 57 St. Rep. 613 (2000).

Annuity Contract Considered Investment, Not Life Insurance: Miles invested $30,000 in a tax-deferred variable annuity contract. After Mile's death, the plaintiffs demanded one-half of the annuity investment on grounds that the annuity was life insurance that they were entitled to under Miles' will. The District Court denied their demand, holding that the annuity contract did not constitute insurance under Montana law. On appeal, the heirs cited In re Fligman's Estate, 113 M 505, 129 P2d 627 (1942), for the proposition that because annuity contracts were considered insurance for inheritance tax purposes in that case, it followed that annuity contracts have to be considered insurance for all purposes. The Supreme Court held that because the annuity contract in Miles' case did not involve indemnification, loss, damage, liability, or contingent events, it was an investment, not insurance, and the District Court did not err in so holding. In re Estate of Miles v. Miles, 2000 MT 41, 298 M 312, 994 P2d 1139, 57 St. Rep. 191 (2000).

Death by Pulmonary Aspiration as Accidental Within Context of Insurance Policy: The physician who examined Caster after he died testified that Caster had aspirated food, causing respiratory arrest and then cardiac arrest, which the physician characterized as accidental based on the absence of heart problems in Caster's medical history. Caster's insurance policy provided for payment of a benefit for loss of life due to an injury, which was defined as bodily injury caused solely by an accident. However, a definition of accident was not included in the policy. The trial court adopted the definition from 46 C.J.S. Insurance 863 (1993), finding that the common understanding of the term "contemplates something unanticipated, unforeseen, and unusual, without design, intention, or premeditation". Jefferson National Life Insurance Company contended that coverage did not extend to Caster because his death was not caused solely by accident, but produced no evidence that Caster's death was anything but unanticipated, unforeseen, and unusual, without design, intention, or premeditation. The estate met its burden of proving that Caster's death by aspiration was an accidental death covered by the policy. Ike v. Jefferson Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 267 M 396, 884 P2d 471, 51 St. Rep. 1097 (1994), distinguishing Brothers v. Gen. Motors Corp., 202 M 477, 658 P2d 1108 (1983).

Intoxication Exclusion Inapplicable Absent Evidence of Influence Upon Death: Caster's life insurance policy excluded coverage if death was caused in whole or in part, directly or indirectly, from the influence of any intoxicant. Evidence was submitted that Caster had been drinking the night before he died, but the physician who examined Caster after he died testified that Caster had aspirated food, causing respiratory arrest and then cardiac arrest. The insurance company bore the burden of proving that the exclusionary clause applied, but because of a lack of substantial credible evidence that the influence of alcohol had any relationship to Caster's death, the trial court properly held that the intoxication exclusion in the policy did not apply to Caster's accidental death. Ike v. Jefferson Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 267 M 396, 884 P2d 471, 51 St. Rep. 1097 (1994).

Car Rental Accidental Death Policy as Disability Insurance: An insurance policy providing a renter of a car with coverage for accidental death arising from operation during the rental period was classified as disability insurance under 33-1-207, rather than life insurance under this section. Therefore, an "intoxicants exclusion" in the policy was not voided by the prohibition against such exclusions as related to life insurance policies under 33-20-121. Rodli v. Am. Bankers Ins. Co. of Fla., 44 St. Rep. 1888 (D.C. Mont. 1987) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

No Statutory or Regulatory Authority Mandating Certified Financial Examiner Status: In either 1974 or 1990, Scanlon could have obtained certified financial examiner (CFE) status with the Society of Financial Examiners, Inc. (SOFE), but he did not meet the requirements for certification and thus failed to obtain it. Scanlon later contended that SOFE was required to grant certification by virtue of his senior examiner status. The District Court dismissed the claim by summary judgment because Scanlon had failed to meet his burden of raising a genuine issue of material fact. The Supreme Court concurred, finding no specific statutory or regulatory authority mandating that SOFE confer CFE status on senior examiners. Further, Scanlon's contention that he was deprived of a property right was merely a subjective expectancy. State ex rel. Scanlon v. Nat'l Ass'n of Ins. WHEREAS, comprehensive health care data can show statewide variation in care, including whether evidence-based guidelines and best-practice clinical standards are being followed and how they affect cost and quality; and

WHEREAS, access to comparative data can help businesses to learn where they stand when compared with their peers with respect to the cost and covered services of health insurance policies; and

WHEREAS, comparative data provides consumers with information that they and their health care providers can use to make informed decisions about the effectiveness of treatments and the quality of care; and

WHEREAS, comparative data supports providers' efforts to design targeted quality improvement initiatives and to compare their own performance with that of their peers; and

WHEREAS, comprehensive health care data helps health care policymakers evaluate reform efforts and identify communities that provide cost-effective care so that successful initiatives can be identified and replicated; and

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 338, L. 2011, provided: "WHEREAS, there are hundreds of cancer patients in Montana who are eligible to participate in clinical trials that could be beneficial to them, as well as hasten major breakthroughs in cancer treatment; and

WHEREAS, the research companies cover all costs of the clinical trials, but not the routine care (e.g., chemotherapy, etc.) a patient would have received had they not been participating in a clinical trial; and

WHEREAS, cancer patients are not participating in these clinical trials because many insurance plans exclude routine care if a patient is accepted into a clinical trial; and

WHEREAS, insurance companies and self-funded plan administrators report they have difficulty defining routine care when an insured participates in a clinical trial; and

WHEREAS, limited information exists regarding this issue for consumers of health insurance to facilitate their making an informed choice."

Constitutionality of Statutory Provision Allowing Withholding of Certain Reports: The District Court erred in holding that 33-1-412(5) (now repealed) was unconstitutional as establishing an area of secrecy without any showing that there is a privacy interest involved. Const., and authorized the Commissioner of Insurance to make the initial decision whether the privacy rights outweigh the need for public disclosure. Belth v. Bennett, 227 M 341, 740 P2d 638, 44 St. Rep. 1133 (1987).

Disputed Insurance Exclusions Violative of Subrogation Law — Disapproval by Insurance Commissioner Proper: Plaintiff insurance company submitted several insurance forms to the State Auditor/Insurance Commissioner for approval pursuant to 33-1-501. The forms contained coverage exclusions under which plaintiff would not pay for health care costs of its injured beneficiaries if the beneficiaries received or were entitled to receive benefits from any automobile or premises liability policy. The Commissioner subsequently disapproved the language in the forms containing the exclusions. The District Court affirmed the Commissioner's decision and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The Commissioner had the statutory power and authority to disapprove the exclusions. The exclusions violated Montana law by allowing plaintiff to enjoy the benefits of subrogation in the circumstances allowed by the exclusions, and because the exclusions violated or did not comply with insurance law, disapproval of the exclusions by the Commissioner was warranted. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont. v. Mont. St. Auditor & Comm'r of Ins., 2009 MT 318, 352 M 423, 218 P3d 475 (2009). See also Skauge v. Mtn. St. Tel. & Tel., 172 M 521, 565 P2d 628 (1977). Co., 2014 MT 73, 374 Mont. 278, 320 P.3d 967, holding that a requirement that primary coverage be exhausted before secondary insurance coverage is triggered is not subrogation.

Case Notes

Bond or Certificate of Authority Not Required for Insurer to File Pleadings in District Court: Plaintiff filed several actions against defendant insurers seeking subrogation for payment of costs associated with petroleum tank releases. The District Court concluded that defendants were currently unauthorized insurers and thus were required under 33-1-615 to post bond or obtain a certificate of authority before filing pleadings in response to the actions. On appeal, defendants argued that the plain language of 33-1-601 makes it clear that once appointment of the insurance commissioner is made to accept service of process on an insurer's behalf, the appointment is irrevocable and remains in effect as long as any contract made by an insurer or an obligation arising from that contract is in force. Defendants first obtained certificates of authority in the 1960s, and plaintiff sued to collect money under insurance contracts issued while defendants had valid certificates of authority. Therefore, under defendants' theory, the requirements of 33-1-615 did not apply. The Supreme Court agreed. The bond and certificate of authority requirements are triggered only when service is effectuated against an unauthorized insurer, but in this case the suits against defendants were all based on insurance contracts issued and obligations that arose under those contracts while defendants had valid certificates of authority, so defendants were not unauthorized insurers, and the bond and certificate of authority requirements did not apply. Suspension of defendants' current ability to transact insurance in Montana did not mean or imply that the irrevocable appointment of service under 33-1-601, completed when defendants were authorized insurers, was somehow revoked or suspended. The actions were remanded for further proceedings. Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. NW. Nat'l Cas. Co., 2009 MT 28, 349 M 136, 201 P3d 825 (2009).

No Particular Form Required for Change of Address for Receiving Out-of-State Service of Process: This section provides that foreign insurers can change the name and address of the person who will receive out-of-state service of process by submitting a new filing with the Commissioner of Insurance. However, the statute does not require the use of a particular form for accomplishment of a change of address. ABC Collectors, Inc. v. Birnel, 2008 MT 35, 341 M 310, 176 P3d 1067 (2008).

Venue of Action: Statute cannot be construed, for purpose of venue, under statute providing that actions be tried in county in which defendants reside, as giving a foreign insurance company residency in county of Insurance Commissioner, serving as agent of insurance company for service of process. Truck Ins. Exch. v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 149 M 387, 427 P2d 50 (1967).

Mutual Benefit Associations: Under section 40-2118, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), foreign mutual benefit associations could be sued in the courts of Montana; the object of the section in requiring the appointment of an agent in the state upon whom service of process may be made was to provide for the collection of debts due from them to its citizens and to enforce the contracts made in the state through their agents. Reed v. Woodmen of the World, 94 M 374, 22 P2d 819 (1933).

Case Notes

Misrepresentation and Improper Process by Attorney — Sanctions: Since under this section, defendant, a foreign insurer, could only be served by service upon the Commissioner of Insurance, personal jurisdiction over insurer was not obtained when it was served at its Billings claim office. Thus, when plaintiffs' attorney appealed quashing of the service, the appeal was dismissed. Plaintiffs' attorney represented to the District Court's personnel that he had won the appeal and was entitled to a default judgment, and the personnel entered one against insurer for $150,000 punitive damages and $385 costs. The default judgment was void for want of jurisdiction, and the District Court correctly vacated it. As insurer was not properly served, the District Court properly ruled plaintiffs could not take depositions. The attorney was properly adjudged liable to insurer for $4,031.50 under 37-61-406, stating that an attorney guilty of deceit or collusion with intent to deceive the court or a party forfeits to the party injured by his deceit or collusion treble damages. Service of Order on Subsidiaries: Where two orders to show cause, under the predecessor to 33-1-703 (now repealed) (section 167, R.C.M. 1935, now repealed), were directed to an alleged parent corporation said to have control over or ownership of two insurance companies licensed separately to do business within the state, because of the alleged wrongdoing of the alleged parent company, on the theory that the three were one and the two had no separate corporate existence, the Commissioner acquired no jurisdiction over the two companies and Writ of Prohibition should issue because the orders were not properly addressed. State ex rel. Monarch Fire Ins. Co. v. Holmes, 113 M 303, 124 P2d 994 (1942).

The person's demand must specify the grounds relied upon as a basis for the relief sought at the hearing, and unless postponed by mutual consent, the hearing must be held within 30 days after receipt by the commissioner of the demand for a hearing.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 227 deleted former (1) through (7) that read: "(1) An appeal from the commissioner may be taken only from an order on hearing or with respect to a matter as to which the commissioner has refused a hearing. Any person who was a party to the hearing or whose pecuniary interests are directly and immediately affected by any order or refusal and who is aggrieved by an order or refusal may, within 30 days after the order has been mailed or delivered to the persons entitled to receive the same, the commissioner's order denying rehearing or reargument has been so mailed or delivered, or the commissioner's refusal to grant a hearing, appeal from the order on hearing or the refusal of a hearing. Any request for a stay of the commissioner's order must be made within 60 days, to run concurrently with the 30 days for appeal. The appeal must be taken to the district court of Lewis and Clark County by filing written notice of appeal in the court and by filing a copy of the notice with the commissioner, except that in appeals from the suspension or revocation of the certificate of authority of a domestic insurer or of the license of an insurance producer or surplus lines insurance producer, the person taking the appeal may at his option, in lieu of the district court of Lewis and Clark County, take the appeal to the district court of the county of Montana in which the insurer has its principal place of business or the licensee resides.

(2) Upon filing of the notice of appeal, the court has full jurisdiction and shall determine whether the filing operates as a stay of the order or action appealed from.

(3) Within 20 days after filing of the copy of the notice of appeal in his office, the commissioner shall make and return to the court in which the appeal is pending a copy of his order appealed from and a full and complete transcript, duly certified by the commissioner, of his record of the hearing upon which the order was issued, together with all exhibits and documentary evidence introduced at the hearing. If the appeal is from an action of the commissioner with respect to which a hearing was refused, the commissioner shall, within the 20-day period, make and return to the court a full and complete transcript, duly certified by him, of all documents on file in his office directly relating to the matter as to which the appeal is taken.

(4) Upon receipt of the transcripts and evidence, the court shall hear the matter as soon as reasonably possible thereafter. Upon the hearing of the appeal, the court shall consider the evidence contained in the transcript, exhibits, and documents filed by the commissioner, together with additional proper evidence as may be offered by any party to the appeal.

(5) After hearing the appeal, the court may affirm, modify, or reverse the order or action of the commissioner, in whole or in part, or remand the action to the commissioner for further proceedings in accordance with the court's direction.

(6) Costs must be awarded as in civil actions.

(7) Appeal may be taken to the supreme court from the judgment of the district court as in other civil cases to which the state is a party. A stay of the effectiveness of any judgment may be made only by order of the supreme court upon the giving of security as that court considers proper"; inserted (1) requiring filing of an appeal of the commissioner's order in Lewis and Clark County district court; inserted (2) allowing filing of an appeal from suspension or revocation of a certificate of authority or license in the district court where the insurer or producer has its principal place of business or the licensee resides; inserted (3) requiring a request for a stay within 30 days of filing an appeal; inserted (4) requiring award of costs as in civil actions; and made minor changes in style. Severability: Section 72, Ch. 713, L. 1989, was a severability clause.

1987 Amendments: Chapter 119 in (1) inserted third sentence relating to a request for a stay; and at end of (2) deleted "except that in the following instances the filing of the notice of appeal shall automatically stay the order appealed from pending the judgment of the district court on the appeal:

(a) appeal from suspension or revocation of the license of an agent, solicitor, or surplus line agent;

(b) appeal from suspension or revocation of the certificate of authority of an insurer".

Chapter 537 in (1), in last sentence, and in (2)(a) substituted "lines" for "line".

Case Notes

Stay of Order Pending Appeal: Contention that the appeal provided for by the predecessor to this section, section 40-1106, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), from an order of revocation was inadequate because there was no provision for a stay pending appeal was held without merit since, under the general rule, an appeal in a matter tried de novo in the appellate tribunal operates automatically to stay the Commissioner's order, to deprive him of any further jurisdiction, and to prevent him from publishing the order pending the appeal. Case Notes

Adjusters Encompassed in Definition of Administrator — Jury Instruction Proper: At his trial for felony theft by insurance fraud, the defendant objected to a jury instruction offered by the state that an administrator is a person who adjusts or settles claims in connection with life, disability, property, or casualty insurance and therefore was encompassed by the insurance fraud statute. The District Court concluded that independent adjusters were not excluded from the statutory definition of "administrator" and gave the state's instruction. The Supreme Court upheld the jury instruction, holding that the definition of the term states that an administrator may be a person who adjusts or settles claims and noting that while the definition excludes 12 specific categories of persons or entities who are not administrators, independent adjusters are not one of those exclusions. St. v. Schaeffer, 2014 MT 47, 374 Mont. 93, 321 P.3d 809.

Restitution Proper for Insurance Fraud: Borsberry was convicted of insurance fraud and ordered to pay restitution of $22,997.52 to the insurer in repayment of the fraudulently obtained amount. Borsberry appealed on grounds that restitution was not proper because the insurer was not a victim who suffered a pecuniary loss. The Supreme Court disagreed. Borsberry's policy contained a provision that his policy would be voided if a fraudulent claim was filed. The insurer paid the fraudulent claim under a reservation of rights and suffered a pecuniary loss based on Borsberry's criminal activity. Under Tyler v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 255 M 174, 841 P2d 538 (1992), insurance payments made under fraudulent claims entitle the insurer to restitution in the amount of the payments. The restitution fell within statutory parameters and was affirmed. St. v. Borsberry, 2006 MT 126, 332 M 271, 136 P3d 993 (2006).

Sufficient Evidence of Insurance Fraud Despite Conflicting Evidence: Borsberry was cited for criminal endangerment while engaging in a speed contest, false reporting to law enforcement, and insurance fraud. In light of conflicting evidence, the jury acquitted on the criminal endangerment and false information charges, and Borsberry contended that insufficient evidence existed to convict on insurance fraud. However, the conflicting evidence did not render the state's evidence regarding insurance fraud insufficient to support a guilty verdict, nor did the acquittals equate to an affirmative finding that Borsberry did not engage in a speed contest that voided his insurance policy. Viewed in a light most favorable to the prosecution, the jury could rationally have concluded that Borsberry provided incomplete information to the insurer, constituting insurance fraud. The conviction was affirmed. St. v. Borsberry, 2006 MT 126, 332 M 271, 136 P3d 993 (2006).

Chapter 531 in (2), near beginning of first sentence after "employee", deleted "or producer" and inserted second through fourth sentences regarding reporting procedures when an insurance fraud is committed; and made minor changes in style.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 276, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, it is the intent of the state compensation insurance fund to assist all Montanans by reducing the unfunded liability of the old fund, terminating the old fund liability tax when the old fund is adequately funded, which is currently estimated to occur as early as June 30, 1999, providing for the payment of dividends to policyholders, and maintaining a viable state compensation insurance fund; and

WHEREAS, there was an unfunded liability of $355 million as of June 30, 1996, for claims for workers' compensation injuries occurring before July 1, 1990, in the old fund, which included $129 million in outstanding bond debt; and

WHEREAS, the old fund is funded with the old fund liability tax paid by employers, employees, and self-employed persons, generating as much as $50 million each year; and

WHEREAS, the surplus of $231 in the new fund as of June 30, 1996, allowed the Board of Directors of the State Fund to declare a dividend of up to $109 million to retire the outstanding bond debt in the old fund; and

WHEREAS, the unfunded liability in the old fund will be an estimated $200 million deficit by June 30, 1997, and the surplus or the excess of assets above the reserves that are set aside to meet the claim liability in the new fund will be an estimated $127 million by June 30, 1997; and

WHEREAS, current state law requires the State Fund to use dividends to be applied first to old fund outstanding liability rather than paying dividends directly to policyholders, the State Fund shall, no later than June 30, 1998, transfer $63.8 million to the old fund account to pay old fund claims to allow direct payment of dividends to policyholders; and

WHEREAS, the $20 million appropriation received by the State Fund from the general fund during the June 1989 Special Session partially addressed the unfunded liability issue existing at that time in the old fund and canceled a planned 22% rate increase; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund now agrees to repay the $20 million appropriation to the general fund by June 30, 1999, in lieu of transferring additional funds to the old fund account to provide the general fund with additional revenue and to remove any perception that the State Fund remains a burden on the general fund; and

WHEREAS, because decreases in premium rates totaled 35% in fiscal years 1996 and 1997 and legislative changes in benefit levels have resulted in the return of private carriers, the 15% limitation on administration expenses as a percent of the prior year's premium will significantly impact the State Fund's ability to provide service to policyholders and their injured workers; and

WHEREAS, the State Fund seeks to improve the level of services provided to customers without increasing existing State Fund staffing levels by working with private sector-licensed insurance producers; and

WHEREAS, in response to Haag v. Montana Schools Group Insurance Authority, 274 M 109, 906 P.2d 693 (1995), in which the Montana Supreme Court ruled that an insurer's failure to comply with the time limitations for accepting or denying a workers' compensation claim constituted acceptance of the claim, current law needs to be clarified to provide that the failure to comply with the time limitations does not constitute acceptance of the claim."

No Malice in Cooperating With Insurance Fraud Investigation — Summary Judgment Proper: Sherner was charged with felony theft by common scheme for defrauding an insurer. Sherner subsequently sued the insurer for malicious prosecution. The District Court concluded that the insurer was immune from civil liability pursuant to 33-1-1210 and summarily dismissed the claim, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The court applied the definition of malice in 1-1-204 to 33-1-1210, concluding that the insurer did not act with malice in investigating the claim against Sherner. Absent a showing of malice, the insurer was not subject to liability for cooperating with an investigation of insurance fraud, so summary judgment for defendants was proper. Sherner v. Nat'l Loss Control Serv. Corp., 2005 MT 284, 329 M 247, 124 P3d 150 (2005).

CHAPTER 2
REGULATION OF INSURANCE COMPANIES

Chapter Case Notes

Insurer-Imposed Billing Rules and Procedures Violative of Rules of Professional Conduct: When presented with the question of whether an attorney licensed to practice in Montana or admitted pro hac vice may agree to abide by an insurer's billing and practice rules that impose conditions limiting or directing the scope and extent of representation of the attorney's client, the insured, the Supreme Court considered the requirement imposed by some insurers that defense counsel secure the consent of the insurer's claim professional before proceeding with the case, in order to ensure adequate consultation. Insurers cited Jessen v. O'Daniel, 210 F. Supp. 317 (D.C. Mont. 1962), for the proposition that under Montana law, in the absence of a real conflict, the insurer and the insured are dual clients of defense counsel, arguing that as co-client of defense counsel, the insurer may require preapproval of attorney activities. The Supreme Court noted that although decisions subsequent to Jessen recognized the conclusion that an insurance contract may place absolute control of litigation in the hands of the insurer, the dual representation doctrine is not recognized under the Rules of Professional Conduct, but applies only in determining whether the communications between an insurer and its attorneys are subject to the attorney-client privilege. The contractual relationship between insurer and insured does not supersede or waive defense counsels' obligations under the Rules of Professional Conduct. Rather, the Rules of Professional Conduct have application in all cases involving attorneys and clients, and under the rules, the insured is the sole client of defense counsel. The court concluded that defense counsel in Montana who submit to the requirement of prior approval from the insurer violate the Rules of Professional Conduct by fundamentally interfering with their duties to exercise independent judgment and to give their undivided loyalty to insureds. The court noted that the prior approval requirement also creates a substantial appearance of impropriety by suggesting that the insurer, rather than defense counsel, controls the day-to-day details of the defense. In re Rules of Professional Conduct & Insurer Imposed Billing Rules & Procedures, 2000 MT 110, 299 M 321, 2 P3d 806, 57 St. Rep. 433 (2000).

Not Codified: The last sentence of section 40-2807(1), R.C.M. 1947, allowing a 5-year grace period to bring up capital surplus of existing certified insurers, was not codified in the MCA because it is a grandfather clause. Case Notes

Funds on Deposit as Security — Considered as Capital Stock: The members of an unincorporated association seeking to carry on a fire insurance business deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of the state of the association's creation approved securities aggregating $900,000, with the Commissioner being empowered to require additional securities in case those deposited should depreciate in value. The securities remained the property of the individuals but could not be withdrawn until all their proportionate liability against them had been discharged. There was no joint liability on the part of the members of the association; actions on the policies could be commenced against and service of process had upon the attorney-in-fact of the association, authorized to write insurance for it. Since the deposited securities could not be withdrawn so long as there existed an outstanding obligation chargeable against them but were set aside and dedicated to the business of the association as a final guaranty of the payment of all losses sustained under its policies of insurance, they constituted capital stock in an amount in excess of that prescribed by section 40-1422, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), and therefore, refusal of a license based on insufficiency of capital was not warranted. State ex rel. Intermtn. Lloyds v. Porter, 88 M 347, 294 P 363 (1930).

authorizing such companies to write insurance on the mutual plan (on the single cash premium plan) if permitted to do so by the laws of their states, were estopped thereafter from asserting, in case of fire loss, that the section was unconstitutional in that, under it, they were given a right which by section 40-1431, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), was denied to domestic corporations of the same character, contrary to Art. XV, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const. McMahon v. Cooney, 95 M 138, 25 P2d 131 (1933).

Mandate for Revocation of License — Under Former Law: Where a surety company did not perfect its appeal from a judgment in an action on a constable's bond until the 95th day after rendition but its undertaking on appeal was satisfactory to the judgment creditor, refusal to grant the creditor a Writ of Mandate against the Commissioner to compel revocation of the company's license was not error since plaintiff's rights were fully protected and could not be affected either by the issuance or denial of the Writ, and the effect of its issuance would have been the destruction of the company's business in the state without an opportunity to be heard, it not being a party to the original action. Currently the premium tax is paid by insurers once a year in March. The legislature recognizes the opportunity to collect the premium tax on a regular basis throughout the year and to generate additional income for the state by having this money available for investment. For this reason, the legislature grants the commissioner of insurance authority to adopt rules to establish a schedule for payment of portions of the premium tax during the year in which the tax liability is accrued.

The legislature intends that, in adopting rules, the commissioner of insurance establish payment schedules similar to the schedules used in other states. The legislature further intends that rules adopting a quarterly schedule for payment of the premium tax not create an undue burden on insurance companies by requiring excessively frequent payments. Lastly, it is the intent of the legislature that rules adopted under this act conform as much as possible to the laws, rules, and procedures of this state governing the budgeting, appropriation, and expenditure of state funds."

Case Notes

Form of Burdens in Foreign State: The purpose of a "retaliatory statute" (since repealed) was to place on such corporations the same total burden for doing business in Montana that the states where such corporations have their domicile would impose upon a Montana corporation doing a like business there, and to arrive at a fair and equitable adjustment and to give the statute such an effect, the total exactions must be taken into account, irrespective of how they may be characterized or named. Occidental Life Ins. Co. v. Holmes, 107 M 48, 80 P2d 383 (1938).

Lesser Burden in Foreign State: Where the law of a foreign insurer's domicile imposed a lesser burden upon an outside life insurance corporation, by deducting the real estate tax from the ultimate amount due, a retaliation statute (since repealed) had no application. Occidental Life Ins. Co. v. Holmes, 107 M 48, 80 P2d 383 (1938).

33-2-1102. Authorization of subsidiaries.

Commission Notes

This bill neither expressly authorizes noninsurance subsidiaries nor restricts subsidiaries to insurance-related activities. It is believed that this is a policy decision which should be made by each individual state. Legislation pending [1977] in California and Connecticut, for example, contains no limitation upon the kind of business in which a subsidiary may engage; on the other hand, legislation in New York, Nebraska and elsewhere specifies that subsidiaries of insurers may conduct only certain enumerated insurance-related operations.

1989 Amendment: Substituted references to insurance producer for references to insurance agent or agent. Amendment effective January 1, 1990.

Code Commissioner Correction: Section 1, Ch. 713, L. 1989, a short form amendment, directed the Code Commissioner to change references in this section to "agent" to "insurance producer". The obvious intent of the amendment was to replace references to insurance agents with the new term. The Code Commissioner has not made the change in this section to references contained in this section that obviously are to an agent within the meaning of a principal and agent relationship.

The apparent intent of the Legislature was that they become part of the Montana Insurance Code, Title 33, and the Code Commissioner has codified them accordingly. This arrangement may affect other sections in Title 33.

Source: This part is derived from the Insurers Supervision, Rehabilitation, and Liquidation Model Act, promulgated by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners in 1977. This part replaces the Uniform Rehabilitation Reorganization or Liquidation Act of 1936 that was adopted by Montana at Title 33, ch. 2, part 9, MCA (Title 40, ch. 51, R.C.M. 1947), and repealed in 1979. There were no Montana cases decided under that repealed Uniform Act.

Part Case Notes

Assurance Company Liquidation — Petition for Return of Funds on Deposit Denied for Lack of Jurisdiction: As part of a financing agreement, borrowers were required to obtain a financial guarantee bond for the amount of the loan. Borrowers made deposits with Glacier General Assurance Company (Glacier), which represented 3 months' principal and interest payments and other assessments on the loan commitment. The agreement between lender and borrowers provided the deposit would be returned to borrowers upon satisfaction of the debt or surrendered to Glacier in the event of default. Glacier was later ordered into rehabilitation pursuant to 33-2-1332. Borrowers refinanced and paid the notes with lender, and lender subsequently surrendered the bonds to Glacier. Borrowers petitioned the District Court to intervene in liquidation seeking return of deposits from Glacier. The specific provisions of the Insurers Supervision, Rehabilitation, and Liquidation Act indicate a clear legislative intent that the liquidator have exclusive jurisdiction to consider all claims for any money under his control before claimants have access to the courts. Therefore, the District Court properly dismissed the petitions for return of the deposits for lack of jurisdiction. Bennett v. Glacier Gen. Assur. Co., 229 M 538, 748 P2d 464, 44 St. Rep. 2200 (1987).

Case Notes

Principal Place of Business Proper Venue: The plaintiff brought suit against the defendant bank to enforce a letter of credit established on its behalf by an insurance company that subsequently went into liquidation. The bank moved for a change of venue, relying on state insurance laws. The Supreme Court held that a letter of credit, as opposed to an instrument of guaranty, created a primary obligation on the part of the bank that is independent from any obligations of the party that established the letter of credit. In light of the nature of a letter of credit, the bankrupt company and its status had nothing to do with the dispute between the parties; proper venue was the county where the defendant had its principal place of business. Case Notes

Preferential Claim to Trust Property Applicable Only if Property Continues to Exist: When trust funds are commingled with private funds, the entire mixed funds are impressed with the trust to the extent of the trust funds, except to the extent that the trustee is able to distinguish and separate the trustee's own funds from the trust funds. The trust property need not remain in its original form if the trust property is held by the trustee and the beneficiary can trace the trust property to its substituted form, and if the beneficiary can trace the trust property, the beneficiary is entitled to impress a trust upon the substitute property. However, a preferential claim to trust property in a general operating account exists only if the trust property continues to exist. In this case, the beneficiary was unable to prove that the trust property was commingled with or used to purchase any other assets; therefore, no preferential right to the trustee's remaining assets was established and the District Court did not err in concluding that a Class 4 priority claim existed. Case Notes

Assurance Company Liquidation — Petition for Return of Funds on Deposit Denied for Lack of Jurisdiction: As part of a financing agreement, borrowers were required to obtain a financial guarantee bond for the amount of the loan. Borrowers made deposits with Glacier General Assurance Company (Glacier), which represented 3 months' principal and interest payments and other assessments on the loan commitment. The agreement between lender and borrowers provided the deposit would be returned to borrowers upon satisfaction of the debt or surrendered to Glacier in the event of default. Glacier was later ordered into rehabilitation pursuant to 33-2-1332. Borrowers refinanced and paid the notes with lender, and lender subsequently surrendered the bonds to Glacier. Borrowers petitioned the District Court to intervene in liquidation seeking return of deposits from Glacier. The specific provisions of the Insurers Supervision, Rehabilitation, and Liquidation Act indicate a clear legislative intent that the liquidator have exclusive jurisdiction to consider all claims for any money under his control before claimants have access to the courts. Therefore, the District Court properly dismissed the petitions for return of the deposits for lack of jurisdiction. Bennett v. Glacier Gen. Assur. Co., 229 M 538, 748 P2d 464, 44 St. Rep. 2200 (1987).

Code Commissioner Correction: Section 1, Ch. 713, L. 1989, a short form amendment, directed the Code Commissioner to change references in this section to "agent" to "insurance producer". The obvious intent of the amendment was to replace references to insurance agents with the new term. The Code Commissioner has not made the change in this section to references contained in this section that obviously are to an agent within the meaning of a principal and agent relationship.

Case Notes

Prior Consent Judgment Not Conclusive as to Damages Against Liquidated Insurer — Res Judicata Inapplicable Under Statutory Scheme: When Dr. Lubin performed surgery on claimant in 1980, he was insured against professional malpractice by Glacier General Assurance Company. In 1984, Kowalski filed a suit against Dr. Lubin for medical malpractice. In 1985, Glacier General was declared insolvent and ordered into liquidation under the auspices of Bennett, the Montana Insurance Commissioner. In 1986, Bennett received a claim from Kowalski against Glacier General in compliance with this section. In 1988, Kowalski concluded her litigation against Lubin by a settlement for $35,000. However, no release in favor of Lubin or Glacier General was executed. The insurer who insured Lubin prior to 1980 was to pay one-half of the settlement and Lubin the other half. The claim was referred to a referee of the District Court, who recommended that Bennett pay the entire claim of $35,000. Bennett objected to payment of more than one-half the claim, arguing that the issue was res judicata, based upon Kowalski's settlement with Lubin, but the District Court ordered Bennett to pay the entire $35,000. The Supreme Court held that while the doctrine of res judicata would normally apply, the doctrine did not apply under these circumstances because this section is inconsistent with the common law. Under this section, the prior judgment did not conclusively establish the amount of Kowalski's damages caused by Glacier General, and payment of the entire amount of Kowalski's claim was therefore not barred by the consent judgment. Case Notes

Failure to Acquire Obligations Under Sales Agreement Not Affecting Terms of Bond: Parks contracted with Michael to purchase 96 thoroughbred horses, paying $1,000 down, executing a promissory note for the remaining $1,749,000, and securing the note through a bond issued by Glacier General Assurance Company (Glacier). The bond required Michael to assign his security interest in the horses to Glacier in the event that performance on the bond was required. Parks failed to make the first installment payment, so Michael sent notice of default and acceleration to Parks. Michael also notified Glacier of the default, requested performance, and indicated the expectation that Glacier take possession of the horses or reimburse the costs of holding them. The District Court granted summary judgment to Michael's estate, holding that the claim was valid in the amount of the bond plus expenses for the subsequent maintenance, upkeep, and sale of the horses. On appeal, the argument was made that Glacier had no obligation to pay costs for the horses' care because under the terms of the sales agreement, possession did not transfer until the first installment was made. Glacier's liability for maintenance and sale expenses derived from its failure to perform its obligations under the bond. Had Glacier performed when requested, the expenses would not have been incurred. The fact that Parks had not yet acquired the obligation to care for the horses under the sales contract did not affect Glacier's liability for those expenses under the terms of the bond. In re Estate of Michael v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 264 M 261, 871 P2d 272, 51 St. Rep. 252 (1994).

Part Case Notes

Requirement That Attorney Submit Detailed Descriptions of Services Violative of Client Confidentiality: When presented with the question of whether an attorney licensed to practice in Montana or admitted pro hac vice may be required by an insurer's billing and practice rules to submit detailed descriptions of professional services to outside persons or entities, such as third-party insurance auditors, without first obtaining the informed consent of the client, insurers cited U.S. v. Mass. Institute of Technology, 129 F3d 681 (1st Cir. 1997), in claiming that as agents of insurers, third-party auditors are part of a privileged community or magic circle within which confidential information may be shared without waiver of attorney-client privilege or work product doctrine. The insurers also cited Indian Law Resource Center v. Dept. of Interior, 477 F. Supp. 144 (D. D.C. 1979), for the proposition that an auditor is a confidential agent of a privileged party, so disclosure of attorney fee information did not waive any privilege. The Supreme Court found neither case persuasive, concluding that third-party auditors are not confidential agents of insureds, but function rather as agents of insurers, and thus are not within the magic circle of confidentiality. Rather, disclosure of detailed billing statements to third-party auditors constitutes disclosure to a potential adversary because there is always the possibility of disputes between auditors and defense counsel and their clients that could result in litigation. As possible adversaries, auditors stand in potential conflict with the interests of insureds in competent representation by defense counsel who exercise their independent professional judgment. The court looked to Rule 1.6 of the Rules of Professional Conduct, which extends to all communications between insureds and defense counsel, making it broader in both scope and protection than the attorney-client privilege and the work product doctrine. Although disclosures of billing information to insurers are permissible because insurers are impliedly authorized to carry out representation, disclosure to third-party auditors is not impliedly authorized. The court also rejected the insurers' argument that insureds' consent by contract to disclosure of billing statements comports with Rule 1.6. An insured executing a liability policy with an insurer cannot know at that time what kind of claim will be brought against that insured, what the issues will be, what kind of services will be undertaken by defense counsel, or the legal consequences that might result from the disclosure of billing information to a third-party auditor. Under Rule 1.6, for an insured to make a fully informed consent to disclosure of detailed billing statements, the consent must be contemporaneous with the facts and circumstances of which the insured should be aware. Thus, disclosure by defense counsel of detailed descriptions of professional services to third-party auditors without first obtaining the informed consent of the insured violates confidentiality under the Rules of Professional Conduct. In re Rules of Professional Conduct & Insurer Imposed Billing Rules & Procedures, 2000 MT 110, 299 M 321, 2 P3d 806, 57 St. Rep. 433 (2000), distinguishing U.S. v. "Business Pursuit" — Definition: Montana has not adopted criteria for determining what is a business pursuit for purposes of an insurance policy clause excluding a business pursuit from coverage. The presence of a profit motive (not actual profit) is one characteristic of a business pursuit, and continually or regularly conducted activity may be a business pursuit even though it is not the primary occupation of the insured. In this case, insured's testimony that he had income and expenses relating to the pursuit and claimed them on his tax returns established a profit motive. Heggen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. CHAPTER 5
RECIPROCAL INSURERS

Chapter Case Notes

Reciprocal Interinsurance Agreement Insufficient Basis for Exercise of Long-Arm Jurisdiction: A default judgment was obtained in Colorado against defendants, Montana residents, in a case which arose from defendants' participation in a reciprocal interinsurance agreement. Some of the subscribers to the agreement were Colorado residents. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's refusal to enforce the judgment in Montana, ruling that enforcement of the judgment would be a violation of the federal due process clause because the defendants had not had sufficient "minimum contacts" with the state of Colorado to warrant the exercise of personal jurisdiction over the defendants. The court stated that the provision of the Colorado long-arm statute that covered causes of action arising from "contracting to insure any person, property or risk residing or located within this state at the time of contracting" was not applicable because this was not the sort of "company" that was contemplated when the long-arm statutes were drafted. The court further stated that the defendants did not know the name of the insurance company which issued the policy and had not purposely availed themselves of the privilege of conducting activities within the state of Colorado. Benham v. Woltermann, 201 M 149, 653 P2d 135, 39 St. Rep. 2017 (1982).

Actual or Claimed Relationship — Change of Status: When a woman claimant under a fraternal benefit certificate had been falsely or fraudulently designated as beneficiary as the cousin of the insured but years later became his common-law wife, she, though admittedly incapable of taking as deceased's cousin, as wife occupied a degree of relationship under section 6311, R.C.M. 1935 (since repealed), entitling her to take as such. Who May Contest Eligibility of Beneficiary: When the eligibility of beneficiaries is controlled solely by the constitution or bylaws of the society rather than by a statute of the state, no one other than the society may question the eligibility of the beneficiary. Ineligible Beneficiary — Insurance Not Invalidated: When the constitution of a society and the bylaws of a subordinate lodge provided that where husband or wife is designated as beneficiary, divorce should render either ineligible as beneficiary and annul the designation, the husband's designation as beneficiary lapses upon the happening of the divorce, but the insurance is not thereby invalidated as to others who may be eligible to receive payment. Modification of Contract: The certificate of life insurance issued by a mutual benefit association working under a lodge system, with the original application, the report of the medical examiner, and the constitution and bylaws of the society, constitutes the contract between it and its member, which contract can be modified only by a subsequent agreement in writing or by executed oral agreement between the original parties thereto. Nitsche v. Sec. Benefit Ass'n, 78 M 532, 255 P 1052 (1927).

Elements of Contract: In an action on a certificate of life insurance issued by a fraternal insurance society, the certificate together with the application and the provisions of the constitution and bylaws of the society applicable constitutes the contract between the parties. Recovery of Premiums on Forfeited Policy: In an action to recover back life insurance premiums alleged to have been paid without consideration and under the mistaken idea that the policy was still in force, whereas it had been forfeited for noncompliance with its conditions, the test whether plaintiff could prevail was whether his beneficiary could have collected the amount thereof had the insured died in the meantime. Terminology Change: Section 140, Ch. 575, L. 1981, provided: "In Title 33, chapter 10, parts 1 and 2, "conservation" means "supervision". The code commissioner is authorized and instructed to change all references to "conservation" in Title 33, chapter 10, parts 1 and 2, to "supervision"."

Source: This part is derived from the Post-Assessment Property and Liability Insurance Guaranty Association Model Act, promulgated by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners. All states except Arkansas, California, Georgia, Michigan, South Dakota, Texas, and Wisconsin have enacted this Model Act.

33-10-101. Short title, purpose, scope, and construction.

Commission Notes

This bill focuses on property and liability kinds of insurance and therefore exempts those kinds of insurance deemed to present problems quite distinct from those of property and liability insurance.

"Credit insurance" as used here is intended to mean insurance on accounts receivable.

It is intended that the terms "disability insurance" and "accident and health insurance," and "health insurance" be synonymous. Each state will wish to examine its own statutes to determine which is the appropriate phrase.

Subrogation Recoveries From MIGA Prohibited: The District Court granted summary judgment against an insurer and in favor of the Montana Insurance Guarantee Association (MIGA), Montana Potato Improvement Association (MPIA), and State of Montana. The Supreme Court held that the summary judgment was proper with respect to MIGA because the statute prohibits subrogation recoveries against MIGA, but the statute does not prohibit subrogation claims against MPIA or the state. Howell v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 240 M 383, 785 P2d 1018, 46 St. Rep. 2216 (1989).

Insolvent Insurer — Applicability: Plaintiff settled with tortfeasor's insurance company for injuries sustained in an auto accident, but the company became insolvent before making payment. Plaintiff's own company was not liable under its "uninsured automobile" clause because there was no affirmative act by the insolvent insurer whereby it "denied coverage". Application of the Montana Insurance Guaranty Association Act protects plaintiff as effectively as a strained judicial construction of the uninsured motorist policy terms. Murray v. Mont. Ins. Guar. Ass'n, 175 M 220, 573 P2d 196 (1977).

33-10-102. Definitions.

Commission Notes

["Covered Claim":] The subcommittee feels that the claims covered by the Association should include all claims, including unearned premiums, arising from the policies of the insolvent insurer. A state may wish to exclude unearned premiums, in which case "excluding" should be substituted for "including" in the first line. However, recovery from this state's Association should be limited to persons having sufficient contacts with the state. The subcommittee does not feel that coverage should be extended to elements of the insurance industry which know or reasonably can be expected to know the financial condition of various companies.

The meaning of the term "residence" should be determined by the law of each state. This is especially true in relation to corporations, for the subcommittee feels the "residence" of a corporation should not necessarily be equated with its domicile.

["Member Insurer":] A state may wish to exempt from the Act certain kinds of companies, such as farmer, county, township or assessment mutuals, fraternals or nonprofit service plans.

["Person":] In some states it may be necessary to add reciprocals and insurance exchanges to this definition. Each state will wish to examine its own statutes to determine whether this definition and the others listed above should be deleted and to determine whether additional definitions are necessary.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 380 in definition of insolvent insurer in (b) substituted reference to order of liquidation and finding of insolvency entered by court in insurer's state of domicile for "determined to be insolvent by a court of competent jurisdiction". Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 227 in definition of covered claim in (b)(iii) at beginning of second sentence deleted "If insolvent", near middle after "amount against" substituted "the insured of the insolvent insurer other than" for "an insured except", and at end substituted "insolvent insurer's policy" for "insured's policy"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 472 in definition of covered claim in (b) substituted (i) through (iii) providing that certain amounts are not included in a covered claim for former text that read: "due a reinsurer, insurer, insurance pool, or underwriting association, as subrogation recoveries or otherwise"; in definition of net direct written premiums in (a) at end after "policyholders" substituted "of policies to which this part applies" for "on such direct business"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

Case Notes

Applicability of Guaranty Association's Liability Limit to Each Claimant in Underlying Occurrence: The state paid a $360,000 settlement on a judgment. There were 10 plaintiffs in the case leading to the judgment. The Montana Insurance Guaranty Association's $300,000 obligation limit under this chapter applied to the total judgment received by the 10 plaintiffs combined, not separately to each plaintiff's recovery. Therefore, the Association was liable to the state for only $300,000. Howell v. St., 263 M 275, 868 P2d 568, 51 St. Rep. 53 (1994).

Guaranty Association's Liability for Attorney Fees in Successful Action Against Association: The state settled and paid a judgment against the state after the state's insurer could not pay because the insurer was insolvent. The state then won a judgment against the Montana Insurance Guaranty Association for repayment by the Association to the state of the first $300,000 paid under the settlement. The insurance contract between the state and the insolvent insurer, an agreement between the state (another defendant in the underlying case) and the Association on the defense and indemnity of the claim in the underlying case, and this chapter do not specifically authorize an award against the Association of attorney fees to the state in the state's successful indemnification action against the Association. The state's argument that the state was entitled to the fees because the Association breached the defense agreement by withdrawing from the defense of the underlying action was rejected. Section 33-10-110 immunizes the Association from payment of the fees. It precludes Association liability for any claims other than "covered claims" as defined by this chapter, and that definition does not include attorney fees. Howell v. St., 263

M 275, 868 P2d 568, 51 St. Rep. 53 (1994), followed in Boettcher v. Mont. Guar. Fund, 2007 MT 69, 336 M 393, 154 P3d 629 (2007).

Guaranty Association's Liability to Insured Who Paid Underlying Claim After Insurer Became Insolvent: The state sought indemnification from the Montana Insurance Guaranty Association for $360,000 of settlement money that the state paid on a judgment against the state. The state's insurer should have paid the settlement under a policy but could not pay because the insurer was insolvent. The Association claimed it was not liable because this chapter's definition of a "covered claim" refers to an "unpaid claim" and the state had already paid the claim by paying the judgment. The Association's position, including reference to the claim as the claim of the original plaintiff against the state in the underlying action that led to the $360,000 settlement, is misplaced. The claim before the court is the state's indemnification claim against the Association, which is unpaid. The Association was liable to the state up to the $300,000 limit contained in this chapter. Further, the Association's argument that the state's claim is essentially an insurance subrogation claim is incorrect. Howell v. St., 263 M 275, 868 P2d 568, 51 St. Rep. 53 (1994).

33-10-104. Board of directors — commissioner approval — compensation.

Commission Notes

The number of members on the board of directors may be left open to some extent, as it is here, or it may be specified. The same holds true for the terms of office. A state may also wish to provide that a majority of the members of the board represent domestic insurers.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 65 in (1), in first sentence, increased number on board of directors from five to seven and inserted second sentence requiring that two board members be appointed from the public at large; and made minor changes in style.

Not Codified: Section 40-5707(1)(part), R.C.M. 1947, establishing the procedure for the initial selection of directors and organizational meeting, was not codified in the MCA as being temporary. This clause has not been repealed and is still valid law. Citation may be made to sec. 7, Ch. 63, L. 1971.

33-10-105. General powers and duties.

Commission Notes

The obligation of the Association is limited to covered claims unpaid prior to insolvency, and to claims arising within 30 days after the insolvency, or until the policy is cancelled or replaced by the insured, or it expires, whichever is earlier. The basic principle is to permit policyholders to make an orderly transition to other companies. There appears to be no reason why the Association should become in effect an insurer in competition with member insurers by continuing existing policies, possibly for several years. It is also felt that the control of the policies is properly in the hands of the liquidator. Finally, one of the major objections of the public to rapid termination—loss of unearned premiums with no corresponding coverage—is ameliorated by this bill since unearned premiums are permissible claims against the Association.

The deductible amount ($100) and the maximum ($300,000) represent the subcommittee's concept of practical limitations.

The liquidation statutes of the state may describe the persons to be notified by the liquidator, but since this Association provides a distinctive service, the commissioner may wish to require a separate notification by it.

The subcommittee feels that the board of directors should determine the amount of the refunds to members when the assets of the Association exceed its liabilities. However, since this excess may be quite small, the board is given the option of retaining all or part of it to pay expenses and possibly remove the need for a relatively small assessment at a later time.

Payments From Other Sources Offset Against $300,000 Limit of MIGA's Obligation: The plaintiff had been injured in a motorcycle accident, with his damages stipulated to exceed $1 million. The helmet manufacturer, an Idaho corporation, was insolvent, and the plaintiff received the $300,000 maximum from Idaho's insurance guaranty fund. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court and held that the money received from Idaho's fund had to be offset against the $300,000 limit for Montana's fund, and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to no additional compensation. Palmer v. Mont. Ins. Guar. Ass'n, 239 M 78, 779 P2d 61, 46 St. Rep. 1526 (1989).

33-10-106. Plan of operation — delegation to other organization.

Commission Notes

The subcommittee recognizes current discussion at both the regulatory and industry levels concerning the possible creation of a nonfederal interstate organization to perform various functions relating to the protection of policyholders and claimants from insurer insolvency. It is difficult at present to predict the type of interstate arrangement which may evolve. At the same time, the subcommittee would like to avoid the necessity of returning to each state legislature if a desirable, nonfederal interstate approach is developed. Consequently, this subsection, with appropriate standards and regulatory safeguard, provides a highly flexible transition device. The subsection operates on the theory of a revocable delegation of functions in the plan of operations if approved by the industry and the commissioner. The board of directors would continue in existence in each state which would, among other things, provide the commissioner with a contact for his regulatory control. In addition, membership would continue to be mandatory state by state as recognized under this bill and no new legislation would be necessary. This approach would permit the gradual development (e.g. a partial delegation of powers) of an interstate system as opposed to an all or nothing choice. Finally, it should be noted that the Association may not delegate its powers to assess or borrow money. Assessments would continue to be made on a state by state basis in accordance with the provisions of the individual state statutes.

Case Notes

Montana Guaranty Fund Not Considered State Agency, So State Not Party to Action — Contemporaneous Filing of Notice of Constitutional Challenge With Notice of Appeal Required: Plaintiffs filed a notice of a constitutional challenge to this section with the Supreme Court. Defendants filed a notice claiming that the challenge was untimely. The Supreme Court agreed with defendants, holding that pursuant to former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), if the state is not a party to the action, the court is precluded from considering a constitutional issue if notice of a constitutional challenge is not filed contemporaneously with a notice of appeal. The Montana Insurance Guaranty Association (MIGA), also known as the Montana Guaranty Fund, is not a public agency but rather, by definition, is a nonprofit, unincorporated legal entity funded entirely by an assessment on its members and not by the state. Because MIGA was not a state agency for purposes of former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), plaintiffs were required to file a notice of constitutional challenge contemporaneously with a notice of appeal, and failure to do so rendered plaintiffs' constitutional challenge untimely. Guaranty Association's Liability for Attorney Fees in Successful Action Against Association: The state settled and paid a judgment against the state after the state's insurer could not pay because the insurer was insolvent. The state then won a judgment against the Montana Insurance Guaranty Association for repayment by the Association to the state of the first $300,000 paid under the settlement. The insurance contract between the state and the insolvent insurer, an agreement between the state (another defendant in the underlying case) and the Association on the defense and indemnity of the claim in the underlying case, and this chapter do not specifically authorize an award against the Association of attorney fees to the state in the state's successful indemnification action against the Association. The state's argument that the state was entitled to the fees because the Association breached the defense agreement by withdrawing from the defense of the underlying action was rejected. This section immunizes the Association from payment of the fees. It precludes Association liability for any claims other than "covered claims" as defined by this chapter, and that definition does not include attorney fees. Howell v. St., 263 M 275, 868 P2d 568, 51 St. Rep. 53 (1994), followed in Boettcher v. Mont. Guar. Fund, 2007 MT 69, 336 M 393, 154 P3d 629 (2007).

1993 Amendment: Chapter 596 in (1) increased length of stay of proceedings from 60 days to 6 months and near middle, after "insolvency is determined", inserted "or an ancillary proceeding is instituted in the state, whichever is later, or must be stayed for any additional time as may be determined by the court in order"; and made minor changes in style.

33-10-113. Claims — notice.

Commission Notes

On the general subject of the relationship of the association to the liquidator, the subcommittee takes the position that since this is a model state bill, it will be able to bind only two parties—the association and the in-state liquidator. Nevertheless, the provisions should be clear enough to outline the requests being made to out-of-state liquidators and the requirements placed on in-state liquidators in relation to out-of-state associations.

33-10-114. Claims — effect as to insured and receiver.

Commission Notes

The priority of claims against the assets of the insolvent insurer may be determined by the liquidation statutes. States which do not set such priorities by statute may wish to revise the language in [subsection (2)]. It seems probable that the courts would treat claims by the Association on the basis of the underlying claim, as this subsection requires even in the absence of this provision.

[Subsection (2)] does not prohibit recovery from more than one Association, but it does describe the Association to be approached first and then requires that any previous recoveries from like Associations must be set off against recoveries from this Association.

Payments From Other Sources Offset Against $300,000 Limit of MIGA's Obligation: The plaintiff had been injured in a motorcycle accident, with his damages stipulated to exceed $1 million. The helmet manufacturer, an Idaho corporation, was insolvent, and the plaintiff received the $300,000 maximum from Idaho's insurance guaranty fund. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court and held that the money received from Idaho's fund had to be offset against the $300,000 limit for Montana's fund, and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to no additional compensation. 33-10-116. Assessment.

Commission Notes

The maximum assessment per year may be varied from state to state depending on the size of the base. The figure used should produce sufficient funds to handle any possible insolvency, keeping in mind that the total amount may not be needed in one year.

The 2% maximum used here would have produced in 1968 on a nationwide basis, from the kinds of insurance to which this Act applies, approximately $500,000,000.

Case Notes

Montana Guaranty Fund Not Considered State Agency, So State Not Party to Action — Contemporaneous Filing of Notice of Constitutional Challenge With Notice of Appeal Required: Plaintiffs filed a notice of a constitutional challenge to 33-10-110 with the Supreme Court. Defendants filed a notice claiming that the challenge was untimely. The Supreme Court agreed with defendants, holding that pursuant to former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), if the state is not a party to the action, the court is precluded from considering a constitutional issue if notice of a constitutional challenge is not filed contemporaneously with a notice of appeal. The Montana Insurance Guaranty Association (MIGA), also known as the Montana Guaranty Fund, is not a public agency but rather, by definition, is a nonprofit, unincorporated legal entity funded entirely by an assessment on its members and not by the state. Because MIGA was not a state agency for purposes of former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), plaintiffs were required to file a notice of constitutional challenge contemporaneously with a notice of appeal, and failure to do so rendered plaintiffs' constitutional challenge untimely. Part 2
Life and Health Insurance Guaranty Associations

Part Compiler's Comments

Terminology Change: Section 140, Ch. 575, L. 1981, provided: "In Title 33, chapter 10, parts 1 and 2, "conservation" means "supervision". The code commissioner is authorized and instructed to change all references to "conservation" in Title 33, chapter 10, parts 1 and 2, to "supervision"."

Source: This part is derived from the Life and Health Insurance Guaranty Association Model Act, promulgated by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, 1971. This Model Act has been enacted in the following states: Arizona, Connecticut, Idaho, Kansas, Maryland, Minnesota, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oregon, South Carolina, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, and West Virginia.

33-10-201. Short title, purpose, and construction.

Commission Notes

This model act is to be distinguished from the NAIC model guaranty association act for property and liability insurance. Although several philosophical and technical differences exist between this bill and the property and liability model act, to the extent possible and appropriate, provisions and the format of the latter are utilized in this model act.

The basic purpose of this model act is to protect policyowners, insureds, beneficiaries, annuitants, payees, and assignees against losses (both in terms of paying claims and continuing coverage) which might otherwise occur due to an impairment or insolvency of an insurer. Unlike the property and liability situations, life and annuity contracts in particular are long term arrangements for security. An insured may be in impaired health or at an advanced age so as to be unable to obtain new and equivalent coverage from other insurers. The payment of cash values alone does not adequately meet such needs. Thus it is essential that coverage be continued. In like manner, an insured may be unable to obtain new health insurance or, at least, he may lose protection for prior illness.

This model act does not apply to reinsurance. Furthermore, it applies only to direct insurance "issued by persons licensed to transact insurance in this state at any time." Coverage issued by insurers which have not submitted to the application of a state's regulatory safeguards is excluded from protection by this act. However, states may wish to consider modifying the scope provision to cover certificate holders under group policies validly issued in other states by unlicensed insurers.

The model bill covers life, health, and annuities and contracts supplemental thereto. The term health insurance is intended to include "accidental and health" insurance, "sickness and accident" insurance, "disability" insurance, etc. The individual state may want to adjust this language to fit its particular terminology. "Authorized" has been amended to read "licensed" to make sure that all unauthorized insurers are excluded from this act.

Subsection [(5)(a)] is directed toward variable policies and contracts. That portion of the contract where the risk is borne by the policyholder is excluded. However the obligations of the insurer (e.g. mortality and expense guarantees) are covered. Furthermore, [33-10-224] provides that the Association's liability shall not exceed the contractual obligations of the impaired or insolvent insurer. Subsection [(5)(b)] exempts the reinsurance business of the impaired or insolvent insurer other than reinsurance for which assumption certificates are used.

Subsection (2)(d) [not enacted in Montana] provides a ready means by which an individual state can exempt from the act those policies and contracts issued by insurers or similar organizations deemed appropriate for exemption by such state. Some of those which have been suggested for the exemption are assessment mutuals, fraternals, nonprofit hospital and medical service plans, burial societies, and cooperative hospital associations.

Some additional limitations on the scope are found elsewhere in the act. For example, the Association assumes no liability concerning policies of nonresidents issued by a foreign or alien insurer or for policies of residents issued by a foreign or alien insurer if such insurer is domiciled in a state having a comparable act. These limitations are not found in the scope section since it provides exclusion from the entire act, not just portions thereof.

33-10-202. Definitions.

Commission Notes

This act covers "insolvent insurers" which are defined to include an insolvent insurer under an order of liquidation issued by a court of competent jurisdiction. An "impaired insurer" is an insurer deemed by the Commissioner to be unable or potentially unable to fulfill its contractual obligations. As will be treated in Section 8 on the powers and duties of the Association, this model bill enables the Association to become involved prior to an actual court order. The finding by the Commissioner that an insurer is impaired, even though not subject to a court proceeding, serves as a triggering mechanism enabling the Association to function. For further discussion see the Comment on [33-10-205, 33-10-219 (now repealed), 33-10-220 (now repealed), 33-10-223 through 33-10-225].

Subsection [(9)] defines resident for the purpose of determining on whose behalf the Association may become liable under [33-10-205, 33-10-219, (now repealed), 33-10-220 (now repealed), 33-10-223 through 33-10-225] if a foreign or alien insurer becomes insolvent.

Each state will wish to examine its own statutes to determine whether these definitions are applicable and to determine whether some should be deleted and others added.

(c) As used in 33-10-227, premiums are those for the calendar year preceding the determination of impairment"; inserted definition of principal place of business; inserted definition of receivership court; in definition of resident inserted last two sentences relating to residence of person other than individual and citizens of U.S. who are residents of foreign countries or possessions, territories, or protectorates of the U.S.; inserted definition of structured settlement annuity; inserted definition of supplemental contract; and made minor changes in style. Not Codified: Section 40-5805(3), R.C.M. 1947, defining "commissioner" was not codified in this list of definitions because it was redundant with the same definition at 33-1-202. This clause was not repealed and is still valid law. Citation may be made to sec. 5, Ch. 245, L. 1974. 33-10-203. Creation of association — accounts — supervision by commissioner.

Commission Notes

Each state will wish to examine its own statutes to determine whether a corporate structure would be a more appropriate form for the Association.

Subsection [(2)] creates three accounts, for both administration and assessment purposes, the health insurance account and the life insurance account and the annuity account. These three categories of coverage would seem to be significantly different, so that persons protected by virtue of one account should not be required to pay for the protection afforded persons protected by the other accounts.

Supplementary contracts should be covered under the account in which the basic policy is covered for purposes of assessment. For example, settlement options under a life insurance contract would be covered under the life insurance account.

2005 Amendment: Chapter 469 in (2)(b)(iii) near beginning after "must" substituted "exclude" for "include"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2005.

Amendment effective July 1, 2003.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 596 in (2) reduced from three to two the number of primary accounts; in (2)(b), after "life insurance", inserted "and annuity"; inserted (2)(b)(i) through (2)(b)(iii) outlining subaccounts; inserted second sentence of (3) that read: "Meetings or records of the association may be opened to the public upon majority vote of the board of directors of the association"; and made minor changes in style.

33-10-204. Board of directors — commissioner approval — compensation.

Commission Notes

Subsection (1) provides that the number and term of the members of the board of directors shall be determined in the plan of operation. To avoid problems in initially selecting the board, this section includes a provision for a start-up meeting which will be called by the Commissioner. To determine voting rights at the organizational meeting each member insurer would have one vote. Thereafter the plan of operation will establish the voting procedures, by-laws, etc. governing the conduct of the Association.

Compiler's Comments

1995 Amendment: Chapter 65 in (1), in first sentence, increased number on board of directors from five to seven and inserted second sentence requiring that two board members be appointed from the public at large; and made minor changes in style.

1987 Amendment: In (2) inserted second sentence allowing compensation for designated representatives of members of the board of directors and made minor change in phraseology.

Applicability: Section 10, Ch. 576, L. 1987, provided that the amendments to this section by Ch. 576 apply to "all occurrences that result from legal actions instituted after the effective date of this act". Effective April 20, 1987.

Not Codified: Section 40-5807(1)(part), R.C.M. 1947, establishing the procedure for the initial selection of directors and organizational meeting, was not codified in the MCA as being temporary. 33-10-205. Powers and duties of association.

Compiler's Comments

2011 Amendment: Chapter 27 inserted (1) through (8) relating to impaired insurers, insolvent insurers, duration of association's obligation, premiums due after liquidation, failure of association to act, charges association may impose, nonliability of association for certain foreign or alien insurers, and substitute coverage; in (9)(b) after "assessments" deleted "under 33-10-228"; in (9)(f) substituted "necessary or appropriate to avoid or recover payment" for "necessary to avoid payment"; in (9)(g) after "may not" deleted "in any case" and at end after "obligations" substituted "under this part" for "of the impaired or insolvent insurer"; inserted (9)(h) relating to organization as corporation or other legal form; in (11) in first sentence near beginning after "court" inserted "or agency" and in second sentence after first "covered policies" inserted "or contracts" and after second "covered policies" substituted "or contracts" for "and contractual obligations"; inserted (12) allowing association to join organization; inserted (16) exempting protection if protection is provided by laws of another state; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 18, 2011.

Severability: Section 14, Ch. 27, L. 2011, was a severability clause.

33-10-206. Records of meetings and negotiations.

Commission Notes

[This section] requires that records be kept of negotiations and actions by the Association. The Association should be held publicly accountable for its actions. On the other hand, effective handling of the rehabilitation or liquidation effort requires minimum publicity. Thus, such records will be made public only after the liquidation, rehabilitation or conservation proceeding is terminated, the impairment or insolvency is terminated or there is a prior order by a court of competent jurisdiction.

33-10-215. Duties and powers of commissioner.

Commission Notes

Subsection [(3)] requires that the Commissioner give notice of an impairment to the impaired insurer, and hence to its stockholders, and serve a demand that the impairment be made good. If the company and stockholders fail to raise the necessary funds, this will be a factor hearing upon the stockholder's ownership rights under [33-10-226].

Subsection [(4)] provides that the Commissioner shall be appointed liquidator or rehabilitator of a domestic insurer and conservator of a foreign or alien insurer being liquidated or rehabilitated. This subsection is not needed in those states having the Uniform Insurers Liquidation Act. Requiring the Insurance Commissioner to be the receiver is necessary to obtain the benefits of a "reciprocal" state under the Uniform Act.

Proceedings for the liquidation, rehabilitation or conservation of insurers present several difficulties which the Uniform Insurers Liquidation Act seeks to solve. Briefly, the difficulties have two sources. First, in some states the liquidator, rehabilitator, or ancillary receiver may be a person unfamiliar with insurance regulation. Inefficient administration of the proceedings may result.

Second, the laws of more than one state may be applied to the proceedings, particularly regarding ownership of assets and preferences for payment. The result is confusion and inequity in the collection and distribution of the assets. The Uniform Insurers Liquidation Act meets the first source of problems by designating the Insurance Commissioner as the receiver of a domestic insurer or the ancillary receiver of a foreign insurer. To solve the problem of multiple laws and marshalling of assets, the Uniform Act gives the receiver title to the assets. The ancillary receiver is then required to forward all assets to the receiver. The Uniform Act also details the laws under which preferences in the distribution of assets will be determined.

In drafting this model guaranty bill, particular effort was made to avoid (to the extent possible) disrupting existing state liquidation and rehabilitation laws. However, each individual state may want to consider adopting (1) the Uniform Insurers Liquidation Act, if it has not already done so (27 states have the Act—the Act has been recommended by the NAIC (See 1936 NAIC Proceedings 33)) or (2) the Rehabilitation and Liquidation Act found in Chapter 645 of the Wisconsin Statutes which has been recommended by the NAIC (See 1969 NAIC Proceedings I 241).

33-10-222. Stay of proceedings — reopening default judgments.

Commission Notes

As a means of preventing further deterioration of an insurer's financial condition, each state might consider enacting a rehabilitation and liquidation act based on present Wisconsin law which has been recommended by the NAIC as model legislation (See 1969 NAIC Proceedings I 241) or in lieu thereof that each state consider enacting the summary proceeding provisions of that law or of similar laws in other states. Such provisions would enable a Commissioner to take effective action at the earliest possible moment and thus avoid complications and further losses to policyholders and beneficiaries.

It should again be noted that each state will wish to compare the language of this model act with its statutes. Where necessary, the language used herein should be altered to conform to existing statutory language.

33-10-225. Association as creditor — use of assets.

Since this Act imposes the obligation upon the Association to continue coverage for policyholders of insolvent insurers, the assets of the insolvent insurer ought to be used, to the extent available, for the purpose of continuing such coverage. 33-10-226. Distribution of ownership rights — distribution to shareholders.

Commission Notes

[This section], in conjunction with [33-10-215(3)], is intended to prevent the shareholders of an impaired insurer from sitting back and doing nothing and then reaping the benefit of funds put up by the Association. The court is empowered to modify and distribute the ownership rights of an impaired insurer in order to do equity as between the interested parties.

33-10-227. Assessments — abatement — basis for ratesetting.

Commission Notes

Subsection (2) outlines different assessment methods for assessments needed to cover foreign or alien insurers and for assessments needed to cover domestic insurers. When a foreign or alien insurer is impaired or insolvent the member insurers will be assessed on the basis of the premiums they write in the state. This corresponds to the Association's liability which is limited to covered policies of residents when the policies are issued by a foreign or alien insurer. When a domestic insurer is impaired or insolvent, the total amount to be assessed will be allocated to each state in which the impaired or insolvent insurer was authorized at any time to transact insurance in the proportion that the impaired or insolvent insurer's premium income in each state for the last calendar year preceding the assessments in which it had premium income bears to its total premium income in such calendar year. The amount allocated to each such state will then be assessed to member insurers in the proportion that the member's premium income from such state for the calendar year preceding the assessment bears to all premium income of member insurers from that state in the calendar year preceding the assessment. Thus, in making the proration it is necessary to look to the premium income of the impaired or insolvent insurer in the last year it actually received such income, but in determining each company's assessment the Association would look to the last calendar year preceding the assessment. In any case, assessments would be made separately for each account and the amount assessed from each account will be in the proportion that the total premiums of the impaired or insolvent insurer bear to the premiums of the impaired or insolvent insurer from the kind of insurance in the account.

For example, if a total assessment of $100,000 is needed for the health insurance account and the domestic impaired or insolvent insurer received 50% of its premium income from state X, then 50% of $100,000 or $50,000 will be allocated to state X. Member insurers receiving premium income from state X will then be assessed in proportion to their share of that state's market, as reflected in premium income. For example, if member insurers received $30 million in premium from state X and a certain member received $3 million of that amount, then 3/30 of the $50,000 assessment will come from this company, that is, the company will be assessed $5,000 (3/30 = 1/10 and 1/10 of $50,000 is $5,000).

This assessment system should be relatively simple to administer. More importantly, it provides a base broad enough to meet fairly large demands on the Association. Equally important, since it reflects the market share of each member in the state considered, it is an equitable method of apportioning the burden of the assessments.

The maximum assessment per year may be varied from state to state depending on the size of the base and the concentration of the business. The 2% maximum should produce an adequate amount while at the same time not impose an undue strain in any given year on the assessed companies and their policyholders.

In order to prevent further financial difficulties caused by an assessment, subsection (4) permits abatement of assessments when such financial difficulties might result.

Subsections (4) and (5) provide some limitation on the amounts which can be assessed in any given year. If these limits are reached, to fulfill its responsibilities the Association is empowered to borrow funds which later can be repaid out of future assessments.

Subsection (7) provides that a member insurer may consider in its premium rates and dividend scale an amount reasonably necessary to meet its assessment obligations. This makes it clear that the cost can be ultimately passed on to the policyowners—i.e., to persons who enjoy the protection provided by the Act.

Subsection (8) provides that the Association shall issue to assessed insurers certificates of contribution in the amount levied. The certificates may be carried by an insurer in its annual statement as an asset in such form, amount and period as may be approved by the Commissioner. By permitting the companies to carry these certificates as an asset, to the extent of their estimated value, the impact on member insurers will be lessened.

33-10-230. Tax — writeoffs of certificates of contribution.

Commission Notes

Subsection (1) provides an offset against future premium, franchise or income taxes of assessments, over a five year period. The role of the certificate of contribution in the application of the credit, proposed in earlier drafts, has been removed with the view to minimizing the industry's federal tax, a result that may obtain if the possibility of such credit is not viewed as an admitted asset. The timing of the credit is dependent on the year the assessment is paid. It also allows the member insurer to select the applicable tax (premium, franchise or income) against which the credit may be applied and it permits member insurers going out of business to make use of the credit in their final year of operations.

The NAIC model insolvency guaranty bill for property and casualty insurance provides, in section 16, that rates "shall include amounts sufficient to recoup a sum equal to the amounts paid to the Association . . . ." It is obvious that life insurance premiums, and premiums for certain forms of health insurance, cannot be changed on existing policyholders. Thus, recoupment is virtually unattainable through existing policy premium rates and building such assessments into rates for future policyholders is not only impractical but unfair to all policyholders. The only suitable and practical method of recoupment available to companies writing life and health insurance lies in offsets against premium or other taxes on such companies. The method suggested in this section is not only equitable to the companies involved but also reduces the impact on state revenue by the partial offset over a period of years. To the extent the recovery from the insolvent company exceeds the tax credit received, the state would be the ultimate beneficiary. Such equitable treatment of assessment for tax purposes would have additional positive effects: (1) the state legislature would have an additional incentive for providing adequate funds for insurance department personnel and administration, and (2) participation in the economic loss would be shared, to some degree, by the general public rather than solely by insureds, thus minimizing what might otherwise be a penalty on thrift and savings. It may be advisable in some jurisdictions to provide a cross-reference to the premium or other tax statutes to avoid questions of conflicting statutory provisions.

Some states allow this credit and others do not. Accordingly, this section is optional, and the NAIC neither endorses nor rejects the tax credit concept. Each state will wish to consider this provision in the light of its own regulatory experience.

CHAPTER 11
LIABILITY RISK RETENTION AND PURCHASING GROUPS

Chapter Compiler's Comments

1987 Statement of Intent: Chapter 249, L. 1987, which enacted this chapter, contained the following statement of intent: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because section 14 [33-11-125] authorizes the commissioner of insurance of the state of Montana to make and amend reasonable rules relating to risk retention groups and purchasing groups as may be necessary or desirable to carry out the provisions of the bill. The legislature intends that the rules, which the commissioner adopts to implement this bill, be designed principally to protect Montana insurance consumers while making liability insurance more available in this state. The legislature further intends that the commissioner adopt those rules in accordance with 33-1-313, MCA, which grants the commissioner general rulemaking authority and which permits the commissioner:

(1) to make only reasonable rules that do not extend, modify, or conflict with any law of this state or with any reasonable implication of those laws; and

(2) to make or amend those rules only after a hearing of which notice has been given as required by 33-1-703, MCA [now repealed]."

Severability: Chapter 249, L. 1987, which enacted this chapter, contained a severability clause in sec. 17.

Amendment effective April 30, 2015.

Saving Clause: Section 41, Ch. 370, L. 2015, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 42, Ch. 370, L. 2015, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 44, Ch. 370, L. 2015, provided: "[This act], except for the provisions of [sections 12 and 13] [33-2-403 and 33-2-404], applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to all policies and contracts subject to 33-2-521 [renumbered 33-2-407] that were issued prior to the operative date of the valuation manual as provided in 33-2-523 [renumbered 33-2-409]."

1993 Amendment: Chapter 596 in first sentence of (1), near beginning after "licensed", substituted "to write only casualty insurance" for "as a casualty insurer"; inserted (2) through (4) regarding provision of certain charter information to the Commissioner and filing of the information with the Department and the national association; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 451 inserted (12) regarding issuance of a proper certificate of registration; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 596 substituted first sentence of (3)(a) regarding group liability for payment of premium taxes for "All premiums paid for coverage within this state to risk retention groups are subject to taxation at the same rate"; in (3)(b), after "report", substituted "to the commissioner the premiums of direct business for risks resident or located within this state that the licensees have" for "and pay the taxes for the premiums for risks that he has"; substituted (3)(c) regarding producer recordkeeping for former language that read: "To the extent that an insurance producer is not used or fails to pay the tax, each risk retention group shall pay the tax for risks insured within the state. Further, each risk retention group shall report all premiums paid to it for risks insured within the state"; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 451 and Ch. 596 made style changes that were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the more appropriate of the two.

Code Commissioner Correction: In (3)(c) the Code Commissioner substituted "33-1-408" for "33-1-403". Section 33-1-403 was repealed by Ch. 596, L. 1993. Section 33-1-408, enacted by Ch. 596, deals with the same subject matter as the repealed section. The authority for the correction is contained in sec. 84, Ch. 10, L. 1993.

1989 Amendment: Substituted references to insurance producer for references to insurance agent or agent. Amendment effective January 1, 1990.

Code Commissioner Correction: Section 1, Ch. 713, L. 1989, a short form amendment, directed the Code Commissioner to change references in this section to "agent" to "insurance producer". CHAPTER 15
THE INSURANCE CONTRACT

Chapter Case Notes

Entirety of Litigation to Be Considered to Determine Whether Insured Forced to Assume Burden of Legal Action: The plaintiff was involved in a collision with another driver who admitted liability for the accident and for the plaintiff's resulting injuries. The plaintiff recovered the policy limit from the other driver but sought underinsured motorist coverage from her insurer. Ultimately, the plaintiff filed an action against her insurer for amounts due under her policy. After a jury verdict in her favor, the plaintiff moved for nontaxable costs and attorney fees, which the District Court denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that while the "insurance exception" to the American rule on the recovery of attorney fees may apply when the insurer forces the insured to assume the burden of legal action to obtain the full benefit of the insurance contract, the District Court failed to make any factual findings that considered both parties' actions during the entire process leading up to the resolution of the claim. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's order and remanded for further proceedings. Mlekush v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2015 MT 302, 381 Mont. 292, 358 P.3d 913.

Ambiguous Products — Completed Operations Hazard Coverage Insurance Provision Construed Against Drafter: An insurance policy did not reflect a payment for products-completed operations hazard coverage (PCOH), but it did provide limits for PCOH. Because ambiguities in an insurance policy are construed against the insurer, the policy provided PCOH. Scentry Biologicals, Inc. v. Mid-Continent Casualty Co., 2014 MT 39, 374 Mont. 18, 319 P.3d 1260.

Failure to Clarify Finding of Fraud Precludes Insurer's Defense: An insurer of a pest control product argued that a threshold insurance provision applied only to "accidents", excluding any fraudulent, intentional acts. Although the pest control company that created the product was found liable in a Michigan court for fraud in the inducement, under Michigan law, fraudulent inducement may be intentional, reckless, or negligent. The insurer failed to seek clarification from the Michigan court concerning the nature of the inducement, and the Supreme Court found that the insurance policy's threshold requirement had been satisfied. Scentry Biologicals, Inc. v. Mid-Continent Casualty Co., 2014 MT 39, 374 Mont. 18, 319 P.3d 1260.

Insurance Coverage for Intentional Dumping of Hazardous Waste Denied Under Policy Exclusion: For more than 3 years, defendant disposed of hazardous waste solvents into a sanitary landfill. The solvents migrated into the ground water, and neighbors sued defendant for personal injury and property damages. Defendant sought coverage from plaintiff insurer to remediate the damages and costs for the third-party suits, and the insurer eventually sought a declaration that it owed no duty to provide insurance coverage and defense costs for the environmental claims. Defendant's insurance policy contained a pollution exclusion that barred coverage for environmental damage unless the pollution was sudden or accidental. The District Court granted plaintiff summary judgment, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court applied general rules of contract law, strictly construing the policy provisions in favor of defendant, but affirmed summary judgment absent ambiguity in the policy language. Under the policy, the initial disposal, rather than the migration and any resulting damages, had to be sudden and accidental in order to fall within the pollution exclusion clause. Defendant's routine intentional disposal of waste over a period of years could not be considered sudden or accidental, so defendant was unable to establish that the claims fell within the basic scope of coverage. Thus, plaintiff had no duty to defend defendant, and summary judgment for plaintiff was proper. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Ribi Immunochem Research, Inc., 2005 MT 50, 326 M 174, 108 P3d 469 (2005). See also Bozeman v. AIU Ins. Co., 272 M 349, 900 P2d 929 (1995), and Makarka v. Great Am. Ins. Co, 14 P3d 964 (Alaska 2000).

Recoupment of Costs Provided for Defense of Claims Outside Insurance Policy Coverage: Plaintiff defended claims from third parties against defendant, but the claims were subsequently determined to be barred by exclusionary language in defendant's policy. Plaintiff sought to recoup the costs expended on defendant's behalf, and the District Court awarded plaintiff's costs. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the award. Plaintiff timely and explicitly reserved the right to recoup the defense costs by notifying defendant of plaintiff's reservation of rights prior to paying the costs and thus expressly reserved its right to recoup defense costs if a court determined that plaintiff had no duty to provide the costs. Defendant implicitly accepted plaintiff's reserved rights by posing no objection to the reservation. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Ribi Immunochem Research, Inc., 2005 MT 50, 326 M 174, 108 P3d 469 (2005). See also Grinnell Mut. Reins. Co. v. Shierk, 996 F. Supp. 836 (S.D. Ill. 1998), United Nat'l Ins. Co. v. SST Fitness Corp., 309 F3d 914 (6th Cir. 2002), and Horace Mann Ins. Co. v. Hanke, 2013 MT 320, 372 Mont. 350, 312 P.3d 429.

Insurer's Breach of Duty to Indemnify — Recovery of Attorney Fees by Injured Third-Party Claimant Who Prevails in Insurance Coverage Action Against Motor Vehicle Liability Insurer — Modification of Insurance Exception — Standard of Review of Question of Law: Following remand in Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624 (2000), the Christensens requested attorney fees incurred in the declaratory judgment action. The District Court denied the request, and the Christensens appealed. Generally, under the American rule, a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision, although equitable exceptions are recognized. Here, the parties agreed that there was no contractual authority to support an award of attorney fees, although the Supreme Court held in Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), that 27-8-313 authorizes a District Court to award attorney fees when the court, in its discretion, considers such an award to be necessary or proper. The Christensens submitted that the defendant insurer was obligated to reimburse them based on the insurance exception rationale articulated in Home Ins. Co. v. Pinski Bros., Inc., 160 M 219, 500 P2d 945 (1972), which approved an award of attorney fees in cases in which an insurer breaches its obligation to defend an insured. The Supreme Court noted that the issue presented a question of law, so the standard of review was whether the District Court's interpretation of law was correct. The Supreme Court held that an insurer that breaches its duty to indemnify is liable for attorney fees when an insured is forced to assume the burden of legal action to obtain the full benefit of the insurance contract, regardless of whether the insurer's duty to defend is at issue. However, in this case, the Christensens were third-party beneficiaries, and the Supreme Court declined to extend the insurance exception to third-party claimants because that would sanction attorney fee awards for simply demonstrating the existence of any insurance contract from which a third-party claimant successfully established coverage, which would undermine the American rule. Thus, although the Christensens were precluded from recovering attorney fees under the obligatory insurance exception, the case was remanded for a determination of whether attorney fees were necessary or proper under 27-8-313 and Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 2003 MT 98, 315 M 231, 69 P3d 652 (2003), overruling Yovish v. United Serv. Auto. Ass'n, 243 M 284, 794 P2d 682 (1990), and followed in Hernandez v. Yellowstone County Comm'rs, 2008 MT 251, 345 M 1, 189 P3d 638 (2008), with regard to award of attorney fees only to a prevailing party under the private attorney general theory.

Requested Coverage Provided — Malpractice Claim Unfounded: Insureds alleged insurance company malpractice based on a breach of the company's duty to sell insurance to properly cover the insureds' needs. Summary dismissal of the claim was proper in light of insured's admission that the company provided the coverage requested. Kaseta v. NW. Agency of Great Falls, 252 M 135, 827 P2d 804, 49 St. Rep. 183 (1992).

Case Notes

Purchase of Real Estate — Failure to Close — No Insurable Interest: Bartlett obtained an insurance binder from Allstate on a house that Bartlett intended to buy. The transaction did not close, and the house was destroyed by fire 1 month later. Allstate denied Bartlett's claim for recovery. Bartlett sued for wrongful denial of insurance proceeds and unfair trade practices. The District Court granted summary judgment to Allstate. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the lower court did not err and affirmed the summary judgment ruling. When Bartlett failed to eliminate a prior judgment lien, the condition precedent to the buy-sell agreement was not met, the agreement was terminated, and the bank was the unconditional owner of the property. Bartlett did not have an insurable interest in the property at the time of loss. Bartlett v. Allstate Ins. Co., 280 M 63, 929 P2d 227, 53 St. Rep. 1300 (1996).

Reserved Right of Possession — Insurable Interest: Oil companies which sold certain property but reserved possession and use until full payment was made or until operation of property ceased to be profitable had an "insurable interest" in property which could be covered by fire policy, particularly where companies were required to replace property. Rice Oil Co. v. Atlas Assurance Co., Ltd., 102 F2d 561 (1939).

Agent for Undisclosed Principal — No Insurable Interest: Agent for undisclosed principal took title to land and building purchased for principal in his own name and procured fire insurance policies naming himself as the owner and insured. While the principal's equitable ownership was an insurable interest, the agent had no insurable interest, and under section 40-211, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), the contract of insurance was not enforceable. Stevens v. Steck, 101 M 569, 55 P2d 7 (1936).

Right of Redemption as Insurable Interest: While after a sale of real property under execution or order of sale, the judgment debtor has no title to the property sold and thereafter his right to redeem is but a personal privilege, such right of redemption is an insurable interest which continues to exist after foreclosure sale and before the time of redemption has expired, which he may assign. If it is assigned, the right to recover for a fire loss sustained during the period covered by the policy passes to the assignee. Baker v. Pa. Fire Ins. Co., 81 M 271, 263 P 93 (1928).

Point in Time When Insurable Interest Held: If one insuring property against fire has no insurable interest therein, the contract is void, and under section 40-212, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), an interest insured must exist when the insurance takes effect and when the loss occurs. Libby Lumber Co. v. Pac. States Fire Ins. Co., 79 M 166, 255 P 340 (1927).

Sufficiency of Allegation of Ownership in Pleadings: Complaint in an action to recover on a policy of hail insurance alleging that plaintiff "had" a certain number of acres of wheat growing was sufficient to show that he was the owner of the crop and therefore had an insurable interest therein. Pasherstnik v. Cont. Ins. Co., 67 M 19, 214 P 603 (1923).

Undisclosed Principal: Where agent for undisclosed principal purchased land and building in his own name and procured fire insurance policies naming himself as sole owner and insured and interest of the principal was not shown as required by sections 40-404 and 40-405, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), the principal could not enforce the policies. GENERAL

Quasi-Judicial Immunity for Guardian Ad Litem to Collect Debt From Party: A court-ordered guardian ad litem attempted to enforce collection of a debt owed by the plaintiff for services provided as ordered by the court. The plaintiff then sued the defendant, the guardian ad litem, for violating the Montana Consumer Protection Act. The District Court granted the defendant summary judgment, holding that the defendant was entitled to quasi-judicial immunity from the consumer protection claim under 2-9-112. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the ruling, holding that the defendant was acting within the scope of her duties as guardian ad litem when she sought to collect the debt for services rendered. Amour v. Collection Professionals, Inc., 2015 MT 150, 379 Mont. 344, 350 P.3d 71.

Notice-Prejudice Rule Applicable in First-Party Insurance Coverage: The notice-prejudice rule applies to first-party insurance coverage disputes. Under this rule, an insurer may deny coverage based on an insured's failure to comply with a policy notice provision only if the insurer can demonstrate that it was prejudiced by the late notice. Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

No Breach of Duty to Defend When Insured Fully Defended — Duplicative Counsel by Coinsurer Unnecessary: The parents of a woman who died in a car accident sought compensation from two different insurers of the driver's parents and his estate. The two insurers worked together to ensure that their insureds were defended, although only one of the insurers paid the costs of counsel. As a part of a consent judgment, the rights of the insureds were assigned to the decedent woman's parents. The parents then argued that the insurer who did not pay the costs of defending had breached its duty to defend and was estopped from denying coverage. The District Court agreed and granted the parents summary judgment. The District Court also ordered the insurer to pay the full amount of the consent judgment as well as attorney fees and costs. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that as long as the insureds were fully defended, the duty to defend did not require both insurers to provide separate counsel when their combined efforts would be duplicative. St. Farm Fire and Cas. Co. v. Schwan, 2013 MT 216, 371 Mont. 192, 308 P.3d 48.

Failure to Notify of Claim Pursuant to Plain Language of Insurance Policy — No Coverage — Summary Judgment Proper: The plaintiffs sued a construction company for faulty construction of their home and were awarded a default judgment in the amount of nearly $2 million after the construction company failed to appear. The plaintiffs then secured a judgment and requested payment from the construction company's insurance company. The insurance company denied coverage on the basis that its insured never provided notice of the claim as required by the insurance policy and that the insured's failure to provide notice resulted in prejudice to the insurance company. The District Court agreed and granted the insurance company's motion for summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the grant of summary judgment, given that the notice requirements in the insurance policy were simple and clear and that by not receiving notice, the insurance company had been deprived of the ability to adequately investigate and litigate the claim against its insured. Steadele v. Colony Ins. Co., 2011 MT 208, 361 Mont. 459, 260 P.3d 145. See also Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349, expressly adopting the notice-prejudice rule in the first-party insurance coverage context. But see Atlantic Casualty Ins. Co. v. Greytak, 2015 MT 149, 379 Mont. 332, 350 P.3d 63.

Insurer Duty to Defend Against Subcontractor-Caused Damages From Faulty Product Provided by Subcontractor Under Policy Conditions: Defendant insurer contended that it had no duty to defend against subcontractor-caused damages. Generally, an insurer has no duty to defend the insured if there is no liability to the insured under the policy provisions. However, in this case plaintiff's subcontractor provided a faulty product that was passed on to and accepted by plaintiff before the defect was discovered. The insurer had knowledge of the subcontractor involvement even though it was not mentioned in the complaint. Under these circumstances, the policy provided coverage for the subcontractor-caused damages, and the insurer had a duty to defend and indemnify plaintiff. The District Court's holding that there was no duty to defend was reversed and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Revelation Indus., Inc. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2009 MT 123, 350 M 184, 206 P3d 919 (2009). See also NW. Nat'l Cas. Co. v. Phalen, 182 M 448, 597 P2d 720 (1979), and Geraldine v. Mont. Municipal Ins. Authority, 2008 MT 411, 347 M 267, 198 P3d 796 (2008).

Ohio Law Applied to Disallow Stacking of Coverages — Offsets Allowed: The District Court conducted a conflict of law analysis and concluded that Ohio law governed Modroo's entitlement to damages for an accident that occurred in Montana under a personal auto policy that Modroo obtained in Ohio. Under Ohio law, stacking of policy coverages is disallowed and offsets are allowed. Citing Csulik v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 723 NE 2d 90 (Ohio 2000), Modroo contended that the policy's multiple choice-of-law provisions resulted in ambiguity and that Montana law should have applied because it is more favorable to the insured. The Supreme Court disagreed and noted that although the policy provided for payment of compensatory damages under Montana tort law while also providing that Ohio law governed interpretation of the contract, the presence of two choice-of-law provisions did not necessarily create an ambiguity. The issue of stacking policies was a question of contract law rather than tort law, so the Ohio law applied. Likewise, the provisions in the policy that any amounts available under uninsured motorist coverage would be offset by any amounts available for payment by or on behalf of any liable parties also presented a question of contract law, so Ohio law applied to that issue as well. The Supreme Court declined to overrule its choice of law principles. The District Court did not err in applying Ohio law to the stacking and offset issues. Modroo v. Nationwide Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 2008 MT 275, 345 M 262, 191 P3d 389 (2008). The Modroo choice of law rationale was also applied in Tucker v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2009 MT 247, 351 M 448, 215 P3d 1 (2009). In Tidyman's Management Serv. v. Davis, 2014 MT 201, 376 Mont. 72, 330 P.3d 1135, the Supreme Court overruled Tucker to the extent it suggested that the "materially greater interest" factors supplant the rule from Mitchell v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 2003 MT 102, 315 Mont. 281, 68 P.3d 703, when an insurance contract does not contain a choice-of-law provision.

Admissibility of Evidence From Prior Suit — Distinct Causes of Action and Different Instances of Alleged Wrongdoing: Plaintiffs sued defendant insurer for breach of contract for failing to cover medical expenses, even though coverage had been provided for similar medical costs in the past and the insurance policy remained the same. The District Court held that evidence from prior settled disputes could not be used in the present suit and granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment on grounds of res judicata and collateral estoppel. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Although the medical issue was similar to the prior settled coverage, the instant action alleged wrongdoing by the insurer after the prior coverage dispute was settled and alleged a distinct cause of action arising from a different instance of alleged wrongdoing, so plaintiffs' use of evidence that was relevant in the previous dispute did not constitute relitigation of the prior dispute that would be barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel, and the District Court erred in so holding. The prior evidence was admissible to provide a context for the instant claims by revealing the history of plaintiffs' relationship with the insurer. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008). See also Berlin v. Boedecker, 268 M 444, 887 P2d 1180 (1994).

No Anticipatory Breach of Insurance Contract Given Equivocal Nature of Denial of Coverage — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiffs sued defendant insurer for anticipatory breach of contract when the insurer sent plaintiffs a letter initially denying coverage of plaintiffs' medical expenses. The insurer had denied but subsequently paid plaintiffs' claims for similar costs on five previous occasions. The District Court granted summary judgment for the insurer because plaintiffs did not meet the strict criteria for establishing a claim of anticipatory breach. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that an anticipatory breach occurs when a party repudiates a contractual duty before the contractually established time for performance has arrived, if the repudiation is absolute and unequivocal. In this case, the insurer's letter stated that plaintiffs' policy did not cover the claim but also stated that the insurer would conduct a review of the claim at plaintiffs' request. Thus, the repudiation in the letter was not absolute and unequivocal, but was instead equivocal by leaving open the possibility that plaintiffs' future claims would be honored, so the letter fell short of the unconditional type of statement required to establish a repudiation. Absent a disputed material fact regarding repudiation, summary judgment was proper and the District Court was affirmed. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008), following STC, Inc. v. Billings, 168 M 364, 543 P2d 374 (1975), and Chamberlin v. Puckett Constr., 277 M 198, 921 P2d 1237 (1996).

No Duty of Insurer to Defend for Damages Not Covered in Policy — Summary Judgment Proper: Rumph's insurance policy covered vehicle accidents resulting from garage operations. The insurer denied coverage for damages resulting from an accident in which Rumph's son drove the insured vehicle home after a party. The District Court granted summary judgment to the insurer because the accident was not incidental to garage operations and thus was not covered by the policy. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the insurer was not estopped from denying coverage and had no duty to defend when no reference in the complaint was made to anything remotely necessary or incidental to the garage business and that coverage unequivocally did not apply. No material facts precluded summary judgment, and because the accident was not covered, the insurer was not liable for breach of contract or unfair claims and settlement practices. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Rumph, 2007 MT 249, 339 M 251, 170 P3d 934 (2007), followed in Geraldine v. Mont. Municipal Ins. Authority, 2008 MT 411, 347 M 267, 198 P3d 796 (2008).

Policy Limiting Coverage to Accidents Not Applicable to Damage From Intentional Act — No Duty of Insurer to Defend: Blair was sued by his subdivision's architectural control committee for violating a residential covenant by removing and selling gravel from Blair's subdivision property. Blair sought coverage from defendant insurer. The insurer declined coverage and declined to defend Blair in the suit because the policy covered only bodily and property injuries caused by an accident, so Blair sued the insurer. The District Court granted summary judgment to the insurer, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although an insurer has a duty to defend an insured when a complaint alleges facts representing a risk covered by the terms of a policy, in this case Blair deliberately moved gravel on his property, which unequivocally was not an accident, so coverage under Blair's policy did not apply and the insurer had no duty to defend. Blair v. Mid-Continent Cas. Co., 2007 MT 208, 339 M 8, 167 P3d 888 (2007), distinguishing NW. Nat'l Cas. Co. v. Phalen, 182 M 448, 597 P2d 720 (1979), and Lindsay Drilling v. USF&G, 208 M 91, 676 P2d 203 (1984), and followed in Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Rumph, 2007 MT 249, 339 M 251, 170 P3d 934 (2007). See also Safeco Ins. Co. of America v. Y2K Computer Problems Considered Faulty Design and Inherent Vice — Insurance Coverage Precluded by Policy Exclusions: The state filed insurance claims related to remediation of problems associated with the Y2K transition. The claims were denied, and the state sued. The District Court held that the claims were precluded from coverage by policy language that excluded coverage for damage caused by faulty design and inherent vice. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. An inherent vice is an existing defect, disease, or decay or the inherent nature of a commodity that will cause it to deteriorate over time and also means a loss not covered by a policy that is not related to an extraneous cause but to a loss entirely from internal decomposition or some quality that brings about its own injury or destruction and that must be inherent in the property for which recovery is sought. The state's Y2K problem was an excluded inherent vice because the date field was an inherent problem that brought about its own problem. The faulty design and inherent vice policy exclusions were not ambiguous and clearly excluded the claimed losses. Even though the state did not receive copies of the policies, the policies were renewals of existing policies that contained identical coverage provisions and exclusions, so the state could not reasonably claim that it was unaware of the relevant policy terms and exclusions, and the insurer could rely on valid exclusions in the policy when the state had notice of the exclusions. St. v. Allendale Mut. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 83, 337 M 49, 154 P3d 1233 (2007), following Port of Seattle v. Lexington Ins. Co., 48 P3d 334 (Wash. App. 2002), and GTE Corp. v. Allendale Mut. Ins. Co., 372 F3d 598 (3rd Cir. 2004).

No Right to Subrogation From Insurance Loss Payee — Summary Judgment Proper: The Montana Petroleum Tank Release Compensation Board reimbursed a gas station owner $254,842 for expenses incurred in an environmental remediation, and the Board then sought to exercise subrogation rights against the owner's insurer and a lessee for reimbursement. The District Court granted summary judgment to the insurer after finding that the Board had no right of subrogation through the gas station owner, and the Board appealed. The Supreme Court noted that the gas station owner was at most a loss payee under its insurance policy, so the Board had no right of subrogation through the owner or through the corporation established to run the gas station, which had no part in funding the remediation or obligation to pay for any part of the remediation. The Board could not show that the owner's insurer was unjustly enriched by failing to pay a claim that the insurer did not owe, so subrogation did not apply. Thus, the Board had no right to subrogation through either the owner or the lessee to recover damages from the owner's insurer, and summary judgment was proper. Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. Capitol Indem. Co., 2006 MT 133, 332 M 352, 137 P3d 522 (2006), distinguishing Swingley v. Riechoff, 112 M 59, 112 P2d 1075 (1941).

Insurance Coverage for Intentional Dumping of Hazardous Waste Denied Under Policy Exclusion: For more than 3 years, defendant disposed of hazardous waste solvents into a sanitary landfill. The solvents migrated into the ground water, and neighbors sued defendant for personal injury and property damages. Defendant sought coverage from plaintiff insurer to remediate the damages and costs for the third-party suits, and the insurer eventually sought a declaration that it owed no duty to provide insurance coverage and defense costs for the environmental claims. Defendant's insurance policy contained a pollution exclusion that barred coverage for environmental damage unless the pollution was sudden or accidental. The District Court granted plaintiff summary judgment, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court applied general rules of contract law, strictly construing the policy provisions in favor of defendant, but affirmed summary judgment absent ambiguity in the policy language. Under the policy, the initial disposal, rather than the migration and any resulting damages, had to be sudden and accidental in order to fall within the pollution exclusion clause. Defendant's routine intentional disposal of waste over a period of years could not be considered sudden or accidental, so defendant was unable to establish that the claims fell within the basic scope of coverage. Thus, plaintiff had no duty to defend defendant, and summary judgment for plaintiff was proper. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Ribi Immunochem Research, Inc., 2005 MT 50, 326 M 174, 108 P3d 469 (2005). See also Bozeman v. AIU Ins. Co., 272 M 349, 900 P2d 929 (1995), and Makarka v. Great Am. Ins. Co, 14 P3d 964 (Alaska 2000).

Recoupment of Costs Provided for Defense of Claims Outside Insurance Policy Coverage: Plaintiff defended claims from third parties against defendant, but the claims were subsequently determined to be barred by exclusionary language in defendant's policy. Plaintiff sought to recoup the costs expended on defendant's behalf, and the District Court awarded plaintiff's costs. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the award. Plaintiff timely and explicitly reserved the right to recoup the defense costs by notifying defendant of plaintiff's reservation of rights prior to paying the costs and thus expressly reserved its right to recoup defense costs if a court determined that plaintiff had no duty to provide the costs. Defendant implicitly accepted plaintiff's reserved rights by posing no objection to the reservation. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Ribi Immunochem Research, Inc., 2005 MT 50, 326 M 174, 108 P3d 469 (2005). See also Grinnell Mut. Reins. Co. v. Shierk, 996 F. Supp. 836 (S.D. Ill. 1998), United Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Retroactive Applicability of Decision Prohibiting Antistacking of Insurance Provisions to Pending Cases: In Hardy v. Progressive Specialty Ins. Co., 2003 MT 85, 315 M 107, 67 P3d 892

(2003), the Supreme Court decided that antistacking provisions in an underinsured motorist policy were unconstitutional. Plaintiffs brought a class action in federal court claiming that Hardy entitled them to additional payments from past insurance claims that were not previously allowed because their policies did not allow for stacking. The federal court certified the question to the Supreme Court as to whether Hardy applied prospectively only or retroactively to qualified claims arising before the Hardy decision. The Supreme Court agreed with the decision in Harper v. Va. Dept. of Taxation, 509 US 86 (1993), that limiting a rule of law to its prospective application creates an arbitrary distinction between litigants based merely on the timing of their claims and that in the interests of fairness and finality, the line should be drawn between claims that are final and claims that are not. The Supreme Court then decided that the retroactivity test in Chevron Oil Co. v. Huson, 404 US 97 (1971), still applies to Montana civil decisions if all three Chevron factors are met: (1) the decision to be applied nonretroactively must establish a new principle of law, either by overruling clear past precedent on which litigants may have relied or by deciding an issue of first impression whose resolution was not clearly foreshadowed; (2) the court must weigh the merits and demerits in each case by looking at the prior history of the rule in question, its purpose and effect, and whether retroactive application will further or retard its operation; and (3) the inequity imposed by retroactive application has been weighed. However, the retroactive effect of a decision does not apply to cases that became final or that were settled prior to a decision's issuance. Thus, Hardy applies retroactively in qualifying circumstances on open claims arising before its issuance and is limited to cases pending on direct appeal or not yet final. Dempsey v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2004 MT 391, 325 M 207, 104 P3d 483 (2004). See also LaMere v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2011 MT 272, 362 Mont. 379, 265 P.3d 617, holding that under Dempsey, a settled case is considered final.

Improper Resolution of Disputed Issues of Material Fact Once Insurer's Duty to Defend Established — Reversible Error: A driver was injured when his vehicle struck a horse and filed a claim against Staples, who was allegedly pasturing the horse just prior to the accident. Staples then filed a third-party complaint against the horse owners, claiming that as the horse's custodian, he was an additional insured under the insurance policy of one owner and was entitled to a defense. Defendant insurer unilaterally decided that its insured was not the horse's owner and sought a declaration that it had no duty to defend or provide coverage to Staples. On cross-motions for summary judgment, the District Court found that Staples might be an insured under the policy and that defendant had a duty to defend Staples, but then went on to conclude that because the policyholder did not own the horse at the time of the accident, Staples was not a third-party insured. Therefore, summary judgment was granted to the insurer. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Having correctly determined that the insurer had a duty to defend, the District Court should have ended the analysis and concluded that because the insurer breached that duty, it was estopped from denying coverage and that Staples was entitled to coverage. It was error for the District Court to then proceed to resolve disputed issues of fact in ruling on the summary judgment motion in favor of the insurer. Staples v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Offset Provision in Underinsured Motorist Policy Violative of State Policy — Antistacking Provisions Unconstitutional: Hardy paid separate premiums for underinsured motorist (UIM) coverage of $50,000 a person and $100,000 an accident for each of three vehicles. Hardy was injured when the vehicle that he was riding in was negligently struck by another car. Hardy recovered $50,000 from the other driver's liability insurer, but that amount was insufficient to cover Hardy's injuries, so Hardy sought compensation pursuant to the UIM coverage on his vehicles. Hardy believed that the policies could be stacked to aggregate $150,000 of UIM coverage. Defendant insurance company denied coverage, and Hardy sued in federal District Court. The insurer raised three arguments in its defense, contending that: (1) the tortfeasor's vehicle was not underinsured, as defined in the policy, because the total liability coverage for the tortfeasor's vehicle was equal to the highest single UIM coverage limit in Hardy's policy; (2) the policy required Hardy's UIM coverage for one vehicle to be offset by all amounts recovered from the tortfeasor; and (3) Hardy's UIM coverages could not be stacked or aggregated for purposes of either comparing limits or affording $150,000 of UIM coverage. The federal District Court certified the three questions to the Montana Supreme Court, which determined that the UIM definition and offset clause in Hardy's policy violated Hardy's reasonable expectation of coverage when a tortfeasor's insurance provided inadequate indemnity. The policy declarations page suggested coverage in an amount that was actually not available; therefore, the terms of the UIM coverage were ambiguous in violation of Montana public policy and rendered the coverage that the insurer promised to provide illusory. Further, the provisions of 33-23-203 that allow insurers to charge premiums for nonexistent coverage are not rationally related to the objective of maintaining affordable insurance in Montana and constitute an arbitrary and capricious legislative action that is unconstitutionally violative of due process. A Montanan should reasonably expect coverage up to the aggregate limits of separate policies when a separate premium for UIM coverage was charged for each policy. Antistacking provisions that allow an insurer to receive valuable consideration for coverage that is not provided are against public policy. Hardy v. Progressive Specialty Ins. Co., 2003 MT 85, 315 M 107, 67 P3d 892 (2003), followed in Mitchell v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 2003 MT 102, 315 M 281, 68 P3d 703 (2003), and distinguished in Parish v. Morris, 2012 MT 116, 365 Mont. 171, 278 P.3d 1015. The Hardy decision was applied retroactively to open claims arising before its issuance and was limited to cases pending on direct appeal or not yet final in Dempsey v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2004 MT 391, 325 M 207, 104 P3d 483 (2004), which was followed in LaMere v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2011 MT 272, 362 Mont. 379, 265 P.3d 617, holding that under Dempsey, a settled case is considered final. See also Chaffee v. USF&G Co., 181 M 1, 591 P2d 1102 (1979), and Bennett v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 261 M 386, 862 P2d 1146 (1993).

Wendell Test Applied to Determination of Whether Bodily Injury Caused by Accident "Resulting From the Use" of Insured Vehicle: Defendant's son was injured in a hunting accident after riding to the hunt in a vehicle owned by Wajahuski and insured by plaintiff. The insurance policy provided for coverage resulting from the use of a vehicle. The District Court applied the test in Wendell v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 1999 MT 17, 293 M 140, 974 P2d 623 (1999), and held that the automobile insurance policy did not provide liability coverage with respect to defendant's claims for bodily injury. Defendant appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Even though the Wendell test was originally applied in an uninsured motorist case, the expansive, fact-intensive test also applied here. The phrase "resulting from the use" was ambiguous, so the contract terms were construed in a light most favorable to the insured or other beneficiary. The accident could have occurred in any location, regardless of how the hunters reached their destination. The fact that that particular vehicle was used to transport the hunters and assist in the hunt provided no connection between the use of the vehicle and the hunting accident. Thus, the District Court did not err in holding that the personal injuries were not caused by an accident resulting from the use of the insured motor vehicle. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Ferrin, 2002 MT 196, 311 M 155, 54 P3d 21 (2002).

No Duty of Care Absent Relationship Between Plaintiff and Insurance Agent: Seal sold saddles and tack to Hart. Hart was to procure insurance on the goods to protect against casualty loss and theft, so Hart contracted with a South Dakota insurance agent for property insurance. Seal was not named in the policy as a loss payee. The goods were subsequently stolen, but the insurer refused to pay on grounds that Hart was not a common carrier and, as owner of the property, was not hauling the property of another. Seal sued the insurance agent for breach of contract and failure to procure insurance on Seal's behalf. The District Court concluded that Seal did not contract with the agent to insure any person, property, or risk in Montana, so no relationship existed between the parties to establish a duty on the agent's behalf to procure insurance for Seal. The Supreme Court affirmed. The question of duty is a problem of the relationship between individuals that imposes upon one a legal obligation for the benefit of the other. Here, the only conversations regarding the procurement of insurance occurred between Hart and the agent. Seal never contacted the agent, so no relationship existed between Seal and the agent that gave rise to a corresponding duty to allow Seal to recover on the claim. The certificate of insurance alone did not constitute a contract to procure insurance or impose a duty on the certificate issuer to procure insurance. Seal v. Hart, 2002 MT 149, 310 M 307, 50 P3d 522 (2002). See also Lu-An-Do, Inc. v. Kloots, 721 NE 2d 507 (Ohio Ct. App. 1999).

"Other Insurance" Clause Upheld to Deny Unjust Enrichment: Summers purchased a homeowner's policy from American and 2 years later purchased an additional policy from National without canceling his first policy. The home was subsequently burned, and Summers filed a claim with American. When American learned of the policy with National, National filed an interpleader action with the District Court and deposited its policy limit of $77,000, to which both American and Summers claimed entitlement. The American policy contained explicit language that the policy terminated upon the purchase of the subsequent policy by Summers.

Relying on the public policy enunciated in automobile insurance stacking cases, Summers argued that the "other insurance" clause in American's policy was void as a matter of public policy. See Bennett v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 261 M 386, 862 P2d 1146 (1993). The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that stacking automobile policies was allowed in order to ensure that victims receive adequate compensation but that in the case before it, Summers could not demonstrate that the compensation received from National did not fully cover his loss and therefore American did not have to pay the homeowner a second time for the loss and was only liable to Summers for the premiums collected after Summers obtained the National policy. The Supreme Court also disagreed with Summer's claim that pursuant to 33-24-102, the actual value of the property could not be ascertained and therefore the coverage of both policies should be taken as conclusively showing the value of the property. The Supreme Court stated that because it had already found that American's policy terminated automatically under the "other insurance" clause, when Summers purchased the second policy, 33-24-102 was inapplicable. Nat'l. Cas. Co. v. Am. Bankers Ins. Co. of Fla., 2001 MT 28, 304 M 163, 19 P3d 223, (2001).

Requirement That Attorney Submit Detailed Descriptions of Services Violative of Client Confidentiality: When presented with the question of whether an attorney licensed to practice in Montana or admitted pro hac vice may be required by an insurer's billing and practice rules to submit detailed descriptions of professional services to outside persons or entities, such as third-party insurance auditors, without first obtaining the informed consent of the client, insurers cited U.S. v. Mass. Institute of Technology, 129 F3d 681 (1st Cir. 1997), in claiming that as agents of insurers, third-party auditors are part of a privileged community or magic circle within which confidential information may be shared without waiver of attorney-client privilege or work product doctrine. The insurers also cited Indian Law Resource Center v. Dept. of Interior, 477 F. Supp. 144 (D. D.C. 1979), for the proposition that an auditor is a confidential agent of a privileged party, so disclosure of attorney fee information did not waive any privilege. The Supreme Court found neither case persuasive, concluding that third-party auditors are not confidential agents of insureds, but function rather as agents of insurers, and thus are not within the magic circle of confidentiality. Rather, disclosure of detailed billing statements to third-party auditors constitutes disclosure to a potential adversary because there is always the possibility of disputes between auditors and defense counsel and their clients that could result in litigation. As possible adversaries, auditors stand in potential conflict with the interests of insureds in competent representation by defense counsel who exercise their independent professional judgment. The court looked to Rule 1.6 of the Rules of Professional Conduct, which extends to all communications between insureds and defense counsel, making it broader in both scope and protection than the attorney-client privilege and the work product doctrine. Although disclosures of billing information to insurers are permissible because insurers are impliedly authorized to carry out representation, disclosure to third-party auditors is not impliedly authorized. The court also rejected the insurers' argument that insureds' consent by contract to disclosure of billing statements comports with Rule 1.6. An insured executing a liability policy with an insurer cannot know at that time what kind of claim will be brought against that insured, what the issues will be, what kind of services will be undertaken by defense counsel, or the legal consequences that might result from the disclosure of billing information to a third-party auditor. Under Rule 1.6, for an insured to make a fully informed consent to disclosure of detailed billing statements, the consent must be contemporaneous with the facts and circumstances of which the insured should be aware. Thus, disclosure by defense counsel of detailed descriptions of professional services to third-party auditors without first obtaining the informed consent of the insured violates confidentiality under the Rules of Professional Conduct. In re Rules of Professional Conduct & Insurer Imposed Billing Rules & Procedures, 2000 MT 110, 299 M 321, 2 P3d 806, 57 St. Rep. 433 (2000), distinguishing U.S. v. Schwimmer, 892 F2d 237 (2nd Cir. 1989).

Failure to Effectuate Insurance Settlement in Good Faith as Independent Cause of Action: Under 33-18-201, an insurer is required to attempt in good faith to effectuate prompt, fair, and equitable settlements of claims in which liability has become reasonably clear. A violation of this provision gives rise to an independent cause of action under 33-18-242. Because the continuing duty of good faith is not ended by commencement of a lawsuit by an insured, that duty can be breached by an insurer's postfiling conduct, including the actions of attorneys conducting the insurer's defense. Amendment of the claim to include an action under 33-18-242 related back to the original claim and was properly allowed. Further, third-party defendant's alleged failure to conduct a reasonable investigation and its subsequent refusal to pay the claim, although occurring more than 2 years before commencement of plaintiff's cause of action, were, if proved, ostensibly part of the bad faith postjudgment conduct. Thus, the evidence of those acts was not time-barred. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 288, 297 M 33, 991 P2d 915, 56 St. Rep. 1152 (1999), following Safeco Ins. Co. v. Ellinghouse, 223 M 239, 725 P2d 217, 43 St. Rep. 1689 (1986), and Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 261 M 91, 861 P2d 895, 50 St. Rep. 1210 (1993).

Insured Entitled to Recover Attorney Fees, Costs, and Interest, Including Prejudgment Interest, Before Insurer May Recover Pursuant to Subrogation Rights: Park Plaza Hotel suffered extensive property damage when a train wrecked in subzero weather, causing a power outage during which the hotel's pipes burst. The hotel's insurer paid the hotel the limits of its policy, and the hotel sued the railroad for damages in excess of the policy limits. The insurer joined in the suit. The hotel cross-claimed against its insurer for attorney fees and costs expended in recovering its excess damages from the railroad. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court and held that the insured must recover all that it has lost, including attorney fees and costs expended in an attempt to recover sums over and above those received under its policy with the insurer, before the insurer may recover pursuant to its subrogation rights. The Supreme Court also held that the insurer was obligated to pay any prejudgment interest to which the lower court determined the insured was entitled. DeTienne Associates Ltd. Partnership v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 266 M 184, 879 P2d 704, 51 St. Rep. 730 (1994), following and clarifying Skauge v. Mtn. St. Tel. & Tel. Co., 172 M 521, 565 P2d 628 (1977).

Agreement to Defend Until Investigation Shows No Covered Risk Involved: An insurance company with no contractual duty to defend as to certain claims against insured agreed to defend the whole case unless and until its investigation showed that the case had reached the point at which there were no claims that insurer had a duty to defend. Insurer refused to defend plaintiff's appeal because the sole issue as to which there was a duty to defend had been resolved in favor of insured and was not appealed. In insured's later case against insurer for failure to defend the appeal, there was no evidence from which the lower court could conclude that there had been no investigation by insurer. Therefore, the lower court could not rule that there had not been an investigation and grant insured a verdict on that basis. Furthermore, insurer's attorney had prepared for, participated in, and successfully defended the case in the lower court and was completely familiar with all the facts by the time of the lower court verdict. There was no further investigation that could be required. Reason compelled the conclusion that insurer had carried out an investigation on the matter. Bozeman v. AIU Ins. Co., 262 M 370, 865 P2d 268, 50 St. Rep. 1605 (1993).

Duty to Defend on Appeal When No Covered Risk Appealed: An insurance policy providing that insurer would defend insured for conduct, including defamation, covered by the policy did not require insurer to defend on appeal after a defamation claim was resolved in insured's favor in the lower court. Issues on appeal by plaintiff did not relate to conduct covered by the policy, and the defamation verdict in insured's favor was not appealed. The verdict for insured was reversed and remanded for retrial. On retrial, plaintiff again claimed defamation. The retrial could not be used to find that insurer should have defended the first appeal on the basis that the city had, after the first verdict and during the first appeal, continued to risk liability for defamation. Bozeman v. AIU Ins. Co., 262 M 370, 865 P2d 268, 50 St. Rep. 1605 (1993).

Jurisdiction Over Nonresident Defendant Based Upon Conduct and Not Subrogation Pursuant to Contract — Exercise of Long-Arm Jurisdiction Reasonable: St. Paul's insured, Lynn, and Allstate's insured, Glassing, were involved in a car accident. After judgment against Glassing, St. Paul paid Lynn pursuant to the underinsured motorist provision of its policy and then sought recovery against Glassing based on a right of subrogation. The Supreme Court held that jurisdiction of Glassing was not based upon a provision of the insurance contract but upon subrogation as a matter of law and upon the tortious conduct of Glassing in Montana. The Supreme Court held that under the facts of the case, it was reasonable for the District Court to exercise personal jurisdiction over Glassing even though he resided in Minnesota and reversed the District Court's dismissal for lack of jurisdiction. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 257 M 47, 847 P2d 705, 50 St. Rep. 154 (1993).

Complaint Alleging Events Not Within Policy Coverage — No Duty to Defend: As set out in Atcheson v. Safeco, 165 M 239, 527 P2d 549 (1974), the general rule is that an insurer has a duty to defend when a complaint filed against its insured sets forth facts that bring an event within the policy provisions. However, when the complaint alleges events not within the coverage of the policy and the insurer would not be obligated to indemnify the insured if the complaining party recovered, then the insurer has no duty to defend. Graber v. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 244 M 265, 797 P2d 214, 47 St. Rep. 1595 (1990), followed in Brabeck v. Employers Mut. Cas. Co., 2000 MT 373, 303 M 468, 16 P3d 355, 57 St. Rep. 1596 (2000), and Generali-U.S. Branch v. Alexander, 2004 MT 81, 320 M 450, 87 P3d 1000 (2004).

Injury to Tangible Property Required Before Economic Loss Covered — Plagiarism: After arriving at a settlement agreement based on a charge of plagiarism, an insured sought recovery from his insurance company under a business policy that provided that the company would "pay on behalf of the insured all sums which the insured shall become legally obligated to pay as damages because of bodily injury, property damage or personal injury caused by an occurrence to which the insurance applies". When the insurer refused to pay, the District Court properly granted summary judgment to the company because the charges of plagiarism did not allege direct physical injury to tangible property, but alleged only economic loss. The longstanding rule in Montana is that in order for economic losses to be covered by insurance, a direct physical injury to tangible property must occur. Graber v. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 244 M 265, 797 P2d 214, 47 St. Rep. 1595 (1990).

Ambiguous Insurance Policy Provision — Summary Judgment Reversed: An insurance policy that did not clearly state whether it provided uninsured motor vehicle coverage when the driver was insured but the ownership of the vehicle was not was held to be ambiguous; therefore, under the rationale that an ambiguous provision is construed against the insurance company, the policy was interpreted to provide coverage. The District Court grant of summary judgment holding that the policy did not provide uninsured motor vehicle coverage was reversed. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 223 M 215, 725 P2d 821, 43 St. Rep. 1667 (1986).

Invalidity of No-Consent-to-Settlement Clause: A no-consent-to-settlement clause in an insurance policy, disallowing coverage if the insured settled with any person or organization who may have been liable for the bodily injury without obtaining written consent of the insurance company, was held to be void because enforcement of the clause would result in a backing away from the mandatory offering requirement of 33-23-201 and would place control of efforts to collect from the responsible party in the hands of the insurer. While not denying the insurer's right to subrogation, the court would not allow the right to subrogation to negate the required offering of uninsured motor vehicle coverage. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 223 M 215, 725 P2d 821, 43 St. Rep. 1667 (1986).

Construction of "Occurrence" Policies: The accident upon which a negligence claim was based occurred when the manufacturer of the garage door involved in the injury was insured by Western. When this lawsuit was filed, the manufacturer had been acquired through a merger by another company. The second company was insured by Travelers. Each of the policies involved was an "occurrence" policy. Thus Western, the only company insuring the manufacturer at the time of the injury, is the only company obligated to pay any claim arising from the accident. Travelers Ins. Co. v. W. Fire Ins. Co., 218 M 452, 709 P2d 639, 42 St. Rep. 1735 (1985).

Primary Insurance Company Solely Responsible for Liability: While making a delivery for his employer, Roach and Smith Distributors, Guiberson parked a delivery truck outside the Warm Springs store, leaving the keys in the ignition. Tintinger, a patient at Warm Springs state hospital, and another patient got in the truck and began to drive it away. Guiberson jumped in the truck and unsuccessfully attempted to persuade Tintinger to stop the truck. Eventually the truck overturned and Guiberson was injured. Guiberson sued Hartford Casualty Insurance, his personal insurer, under an uninsured motorist provision. Hartford joined, as third-party defendants, State Farm, Roach and Smith Distributors' insurer, and the state of Montana. State Farm's policy also contained uninsured motorist coverage. The jury returned a verdict in favor of Guiberson for $600,000, finding Tintinger and the state equally responsible for Guiberson's injuries. Based on the insurance policies, the court apportioned Tintinger's portion of the judgment between Hartford and State Farm. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the insurance policies indicated that Hartford contracted to be an excess insurer only, that State Farm was a primary insurer, and that under a "stacking" approach (now abolished, 33-23-203) State Farm's insurance adequately covered Tintinger's liability. Guiberson v. Hartford Cas. Ins. Co., 217 M 279, 704 P2d 68, 42 St. Rep. 1196 (1985). See also Farmers Alliance Mut. Ins. Co. v. Holeman, 1998 MT 155, 289 M 312, 961 P2d 114, 55 St. Rep. 601 (1998).

No Liability Coverage for Expected or Intentional Damage: The insurer issued a manufacturers' and contractors' liability policy to insured, a volunteer fire company. The insured made the purposeful decision to cease fighting a residential fire because the dwelling owners were not members of the fire company. The insured sought coverage under the policy as to damages claimed by the dwelling owners when their home was destroyed by the fire. The insured's decision to stop fighting the fire was intentional, and the resulting harm was predictable. Therefore, the insured was not covered under the policy, which included coverage for an "occurrence", meaning an accident that causes damage neither expected nor intended. USF&G v. Rae Volunteer Fire Co., 212 M 450, 688 P2d 1246, 41 St. Rep. 1857 (1984), followed in Burns v. Underwriters Adjusting Co., 234 M 508, 765 P2d 712, 45 St. Rep. 2089 (1988), distinguishing NW. Nat'l Cas. Co. v. Phalen, 182 M 448, 597 P2d 720 (1979).

Action to Be Dismissed Upon Death of Either Spouse During Pendency of Dissolution Proceeding — ". . . until death do you part": One spouse in a dissolution action died shortly after a hearing was held on his petition for dissolution of marriage, but no judgment had yet been entered, either written or oral. In affirming the District Court in dismissing the petition, the Supreme Court held that death terminates a marriage as a matter of law; therefore, there is nothing for the court to dissolve. The death of either spouse during the pendency of a dissolution action prior to the entry of judgment divests the court of all jurisdiction over the action, including matters involving the distribution of property. In re Marriage of Lawrence, 212 M 327, 687 P2d 1026, 41 St. Rep. 1771 (1984).

Ambiguity — Casualty Coverage of Occurrence After Policy Cancellation: A propane heater in a pickup-mounted camper exploded in 1980 killing the occupant, who had purchased the camper in 1976. The seller of the camper had insurance coverage for such an occurrence at the time of the sale, but such coverage was canceled prior to the time of the explosion. The Supreme Court held that although the insurance contract could have limited coverage, there was ambiguous language in this contract which must be resolved in favor of the insured, and thus there was coverage in this case for a product sold during the term of coverage although the product caused injury after the policy had expired. Truck Ins. Exch. v. Woldstad, 212 M 418, 687 P2d 1022, 41 St. Rep. 1750 (1984), distinguished in Murphy v. St., 248 M 82, 809 P2d 16, 48 St. Rep. 335 (1991).

CONSTRUCTION

Injured Neither Named Insured Nor Occupant of Covered Vehicle at Time of Accident — No Coverage Under Commercial Policy: The defendants' daughter was injured when she was riding a bicycle out of state. The defendants owned a business that had a commercial policy for its fleet of company vehicles; however, the daughter was neither an employee of the business nor occupying a company vehicle at the time of the accident. The defendants sought benefits from the commercial policy on their daughter's behalf. The plaintiff insurance company sought declaratory judgment that the policy did not cover the daughter for her injuries. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the plaintiff and the defendants appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that because the daughter was not a named insured or occupying a car covered by the policy at the time of the accident, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Am. St. Ins. Co. v. Flathead Janitorial & Rug Services Inc., 2015 MT 239, 380 Mont. 308, 355 P.3d 735.

Deterioration Leading to Fire Not "Occurrence" Under Policy: The defendant installed a faulty water heater that caused a fire in a restaurant, and the restaurant sought indemnification from the defendant. At the time of the installation, the defendant was covered by a commercial general liability policy; however, the policy had expired by the time the fire occurred, 3 years later. The defendant's insurance carrier, the plaintiff, denied coverage and filed a petition for declaratory relief. The plaintiff argued that the damage to property had occurred after the policy had lapsed. The defendant argued that the deterioration of the heater that ultimately caused the fire was "property damage" under the policy and occurred at the time the policy was in effect. The District Court granted summary judgment to the plaintiff, holding that deterioration of the water heater was not "property damage" under the policy. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that because no property damage had occurred during the policy, no "occurrence" triggering coverage had occurred. Truck Ins. Exchange v. O'Mailia, 2015 MT 42, 378 Mont. 231, 343 P.3d 1183.

Insurance Recovery — Prejudgment Interest Not Allowed Until Appraisal — Postjudgment Interest Allowed After Appraisal: After a building fire, the property owner pursued recovery in District Court against the insurer of the building and was awarded replacement costs and prejudgment interest beginning from the date of the loss. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court's recovery calculation by lowering the judgment amount and remanded the case for the purpose of calculating postjudgment interest, but not prejudgment interest. The court reasoned that prejudgment interest was not appropriate, as the damages could not be made certain until an appraiser made adjustments for portions of the building that were slated for demolition before the fire. Lincoln County Port Authority v. Allianz Global Risks US Ins. Co., 2013 MT 365, 373 Mont. 60, 315 P.3d 934.

Family Member Exclusion Not Unconscionable — Summary Judgment Reversed: A wife was injured in a car accident as a result of her husband's negligent driving. Because the husband's umbrella policy contained an express family member exclusion, the insurer denied coverage for her injuries. The couple sought a declaratory judgment that the wife was entitled to coverage. They argued that the exclusion was unenforceable because it was ambiguous, violated public policy and the reasonable expectations of the insured, and was unconscionable. The District Court granted summary judgment to the plaintiffs based on its conclusion that the exclusion was unconscionable. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, reasoning that the family member exclusion allows broad coverage at an economical cost and therefore did not unreasonably favor the insurer. Fisher v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 208, 371 Mont. 147, 305 P.3d 861, followed in Meadow Brook, LLP v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 2014 MT 190, 375 Mont. 509, 329 P.3d 608.

"Each Person" Limit Covers Direct and Derivative Damages for Loss of Father — District Court Reversed and Remanded: Heath and Vail and their 3-month-old daughter were injured in an automobile accident. Heath died of his injuries and his father (Frank) sued to recover damages on behalf of Heath's estate and his granddaughter who suffered bodily injury in the accident. The defendant insurer paid Heath's estate $50,000 under the policy's "each accident" limit. The insurer also paid Heath's estate the "each person" policy limit of $50,000 and paid the medical expenses of the daughter. Frank sought additional wrongful death and survivorship benefits for the daughter to be paid out of the policy's $50,000 "each person" limit. The insurer refused and the District Court awarded partial summary judgment to the insurer. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded. The language of the policy defining bodily injury applied to those persons who did not sustain bodily injury. The daughter sustained bodily injury; thus, the policy was interpreted to mean that the "each accident" limit of $100,000 was available and the "each person" limitation of $50,000 applied separately to Heath's claim and to the daughter's claim. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Freyer, 2010 MT 191, 357 Mont. 329, 239 P.3d 143, following Mitchell v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 2003 MT 102, 315 Mont. 281, 68 P.3d 703, and distinguishing Allstate v. Wagner-Ellsworth, 2008 MT 240, 344 Mont. 445, 188 P.3d 1042.

Clause in Insurance Policy Excluding Policyholder Vehicles From Underinsured Motor Vehicle Coverage Valid: Summary judgment was proper because the plain language of the insurance policy clearly and unambiguously excluded the insured's vehicles from the definition of an underinsured motor vehicle. In addition, the insurance policy did not violate public policy because it did not create illusory underinsured motor vehicle coverage. The exclusion set out in the policy denied coverage only in the case of a single-car accident in which the only vehicle in the accident was owned by the insured. Monroe v. Cogswell Agency, 2010 MT 134, 356 Mont. 417, 234 P.3d 79.

Jockeys Not Included in Definition of Exhibitors for Purposes of Insurance Against Racing Injuries: Jockeys who suffered injuries in horseraces at MetraPark in Billings sued the county and the association that leased the facility for the races. The insurance policy listed numerous exclusions, including bodily injuries suffered by special event participants and by athletic or sports participants. The insurer cited the exclusions, denied coverage for the jockey's injuries, and refused to defend or indemnify the county and the association. The jockeys eventually settled with the county and the association and then sought to recover from the insurer. The District Court held that the policy was unambiguous, that the exclusions did not violate public policy, that the county and the association had no reasonable expectation that the policy would cover jockeys, and that summary judgment for the jockeys was therefore inappropriate. The jockeys appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. As used in 23-4-205, the term "exhibitors" means people who organize a horserace, not jockeys who are participants in the exhibition, so the claim that the exclusions violated public policy was correctly dismissed. The county's and association's expectations that the policy would cover jockeys was not objectively reasonable because the athletic or sports exclusion unambiguously excluded coverage for jockeys, and the District Court did not err in excluding the jockeys' claims. Additional Insured Endorsement in Primary Policy — Duty to Defend: An employee of a subcontractor was injured while installing fireproofing in a building. The general contractor's liability insurer (defendant insurer) tendered a defense to the subcontractor under the indemnity clause in the subcontract and to the general contractor's insurer (plaintiff insurer) under the commercial general liability policy, so the question arose whether plaintiff insurer had a duty to defend pursuant to the commercial liability under which the general contractor qualified as an additional insured. Plaintiff insurer argued that because the general contractor could not shift responsibility to the subcontractor for the general contractor's statutory duty to maintain general job site safety, plaintiff insurer had no duty to defend or cover the loss. The District Court disagreed and granted summary judgment to defendant insurer pursuant to the additional insured endorsement. Plaintiff insurer appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The court examined the indemnity provision in the subcontract and determined that the indemnity provision was not sufficiently clear and unequivocal in its intent to indemnify the general contractor for its own negligence, so the court then turned to the language of the additional insured endorsement. The general contractor was clearly named as an additional insured on a primary noncontributing basis, so plaintiff insurer's policy was clearly intended to be primary. Because plaintiff insurer had a duty to defend the general contractor, the District Court did not err in granting defendant insurer's motion for summary judgment and holding that plaintiff insurer breached its duty to defend. United Nat'l Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2009 MT 269, 352 M 105, 214 P3d 1260 (2009), following Slater v. Cent. No Duty of Insurer to Defend or Indemnify Contractor Protected From Liability: An employee of a subcontractor sued plaintiff for negligence, but plaintiff's insurers and the contractor's insurer refused to defend and indemnify against the claim. The District Court granted summary judgment to the contractor's insurer, and the employee appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. The contractor was protected from liability under 39-71-411. Because the contractor was not sued for its own negligence or found liable for any tortious conduct, its insurer had no duty to defend or indemnify plaintiff under the insurance policy or its endorsements. Plum Creek Marketing, Inc. v. Am. Economy Ins. Co., 2009 MT 264, 352 M 56, 214 P3d 1238 (2009), followed in F.H. Stoltze Land & Lumber Co. v. Am. States Ins. Co., 2015 MT 165, 379 Mont. 409, 352 P.3d 612.

No Breach of Duty to Defend When Claim Excluded Under Policy's Breach of Contract Provision: Plaintiff town entered a contract with a drilling company. The mayor allegedly instructed the company to perform work beyond the scope of the contract and said the town would pay for the work. When the town refused to pay, the company sued for breach of contract. The town then contacted defendant insurer, requesting a defense and indemnification, but the insurer refused coverage. The District Court held that the insurer did not have a duty to defend or indemnify. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The policy contained exclusions for nonmonetary damages, punitive damages, breach of contract, and liability based on estimated probable costs or faulty bid specifications. The complaint against the town alleged breach of contract, negligent misrepresentation, and constructive fraud. Despite the town's assertion that legal theories and conclusory language in the complaint formed the basis for coverage, the basis for coverage is the acts giving rise to the complaint, and in this case the actions of the mayor were all grounded in contract and thus fell within the policy exclusions, so the insurer had no duty to defend. Additionally, the company's constructive fraud complaint failed to state fraudulent circumstances with particularity and thus was inadequately pleaded, so the insurer had no duty to defend the claim. Geraldine v. Mont. Municipal Ins. Authority, 2008 MT 411, 347 M 267, 198 P3d 796 (2008).

Insurance Contract Choice of Law Provision — Montana Law Incorrectly Applied to Nevada Policy: The District Court conducted a conflict of law analysis and concluded that Montana law governed Tenas's entitlement to damages for an accident that occurred in Montana under a personal auto policy that Tenas's mother obtained in Nevada. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Nevada was determined to have a materially greater interest than Montana based on the fact that: (1) Nevada was the place of contracting; (2) although Montana represented a place of performance under the policy, place of performance weighed heavily toward Nevada because Tenas and her mother were mere visitors to Montana; (3) Tenas and her mother resided in Nevada, so that state had a greater interest regarding domicile, residence, nationality, place of incorporation, and place of business of the parties; and (4) a policy choice of law provision required application of Nevada law to resolve any disputes. Given Nevada's greater interest, the District Court improperly applied Montana law to the dispute. Tenas v. Progressive Preferred Ins. Co., 2008 MT 393, 347 M 133, 197 P3d 990 (2008). Claim Outside Policy Coverage — No Duty to Defend: The Twites, who built housing complexes, were sued for failure to construct a housing complex in conformity with state and federal requirements to provide equal use and access for persons with disabilities. The Twites had a commercial insurance policy that required the insurer to defend the Twites against lawsuits alleging bodily injury resulting from accidents. The insurer determined that the claim against the Twites did not involve an injury and refused to defend, so the Twites brought a state action to require the insurer to defend. The District Court examined the policy, found no duty to defend, and granted summary judgment for the insurer, so the Twites appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Liberally construing the policy in favor of finding an obligation to defend, the court nevertheless found that the policy covered only bodily injury caused by an accident, and here no accident occurred. The claim unequivocally fell outside the policy's coverage, so there was nothing for a court to construe and no reason to impose a duty to defend. The Twites failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact, and summary judgment for the insurer was affirmed. Twite Family Partnership v. Unitrin Multi Line Ins., 2008 MT 310, 346 M 42, 192 P3d 1156 (2008).

Farmowners Policy Construed to Cover Individuals, Not Partnership: Modroo's daughter was killed in an auto accident, and Modroo sought coverage under a farmowners policy that listed Modroo (and by definition Modroo's family members) as insureds. The insurer asserted that the policy was for the family farming partnership and covered only insureds who were driving a vehicle insured under the policy, which the daughter was not. The District Court agreed and held that the policy did not cover Modroo individually or family members. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that the insurer's interpretation was reasonable but was not the only interpretation. Another reasonable interpretation was that the policy granted Modroo coverage as an individual because the named insured block on the form listed Modroo, not the partnership. If the insurer intended to cover only the partnership, that entity could have been listed as the named insured, but no reason existed for the insurer to list individuals as insureds unless it intended coverage to apply to them. Construing the ambiguity against the insurer, the policy was held to cover Modroo individually, and the daughter as a family member as well. Modroo was entitled to medical payments under the farmowners policy and the District Court decision was reversed. Modroo v. Nationwide Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 2008 MT 275, 345 M 262, 191 P3d 389 (2008). Bodily Injury in Insurance Policy May Include Mental or Psychological Injury Accompanied by Physical Manifestations — Jacobsen Overruled: Defendant caused an automobile accident that injured two brothers, one of whom suffered severe trauma and was hospitalized for an extended period. The boys' mother filed a negligence action against defendant claiming emotional and physical injuries to herself and the brother who was not struck by the vehicle, including the mother's stress, migraine headaches, pain, depression, and a rapid heartbeat when hearing sirens, and the brother's becoming withdrawn. Defendant sought liability coverage from her insurer, and the District Court, relying on Jacobsen v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 72, 320 M 375, 87 P3d 995 (2004), granted the insurer's motion for a declaratory judgment on grounds that the insurer was not obligated to provide a defense or coverage to defendant because defendant's policy did not cover the claimed emotional injuries or physical injuries resulting from the emotional injuries within the definition of bodily injury. On appeal, the Supreme Court reexamined the Jacobsen analysis in light of subsequent case law and overruled Jacobsen. Bodily injury as construed in an insurance policy includes a mental or psychological injury that is accompanied by physical manifestations. Defendant's insurance policy provided general coverage for damages that the insured was legally obligated to pay because of a bodily injury sustained by any person, which in this case included the physical manifestations that accompanied the mother's and brother's mental and psychological injuries. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Wagner-Ellsworth, 2008 MT 240, 344 M 445, 188 P3d 1042 (2008), followed in Tucker v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2009 MT 247, 351 M 448, 215 P3d 1 (2009).

No Coverage for Personal Property in Insured Company's Care for Damage by Company Employees: Plaintiff company serviced oil wells, and during the removal and reinstallation of the rods and tubing of a well, company employees dropped a piece of new tubing, causing about $30,000 of damage to the tubing and the tubing anchor. The tubing did not belong to plaintiff, but was provided by a separate company and was onsite when the work began. Plaintiff filed an insurance claim with defendant insurer, but the claim was denied on grounds that the tubing was in plaintiff's care, custody, and control and that such an occurrence was not covered by plaintiff's commercial general liability policy, which excluded coverage for property damage to personal property in plaintiff's care, custody, and control. The District Court agreed and granted summary judgment for the insurer. Plaintiff appealed on grounds that a separate policy provision canceled out the exclusion by providing that plaintiff's employees were not considered insureds for purposes of property damage to property in plaintiff's care, custody, and control, and because the damage was caused by the employees, the exclusion did not apply. Interpreting the policy as a whole, the Supreme Court affirmed. Because plaintiff was a corporation, it could act only through its employees, who were acting within the scope of their employment, so the property was also in plaintiff's care, custody, and control and was therefore excluded from coverage. Lambert Well Serv., Inc. v. Wellington Specialty Ins. Co., 2008 MT 212, 344 M 204, 186 P3d 1255 (2008).

Insurance Policy Provisions Excluding Coverage for Medical Payments Paid by Workers' Compensation Not Ambiguous or Against Public Policy: Newbury's auto insurance policies provided medical coverage for bodily injury sustained through being struck as a pedestrian by a motor vehicle or trailer, except to the extent that workers' compensation benefits were required to be payable. Newbury was struck by a vehicle while on the job, and workers' compensation paid all but $1,175.80 of Newbury's medical expenses. Newbury then submitted an insurance claim seeking the full $10,000 in medical benefits from the insurance policies, but the insurer paid only the remaining $1,175.80 not paid by workers' compensation. Newbury asserted that the workers' compensation provisions in the policies were ambiguous and against public policy. The District Court granted summary judgment for the insurer, and Newbury appealed. The Supreme Court held that the policy, taken as a whole, was not ambiguous because it clearly demonstrated an intent to exclude coverage and did not defeat coverage or render policy coverage illusory. Moreover, the workers' compensation provisions were not violative of public policy. Newbury's expectations were not objectively reasonable, and Newbury received exactly the coverage for which he paid. Allowing Newbury to receive more than the total amount of medical expenses would have resulted in a windfall to Newbury. The District Court was affirmed. Newbury v. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Ins. Diesel Fuel Properly Considered Pollutant for Purposes of Commercial Liability Insurance Policy Exclusion: A petroleum company held commercial liability and property insurance policies that contained a standard absolute pollution exclusion clause disclaiming coverage for spills resulting from pollutants, which were defined to include liquid irritants or contaminants. The company also held a coverage extension that provided coverage for expenses to extract pollutants from land or water. When a diesel fuel spill occurred on the company's property, the company sought insurance reimbursement under the policies and also submitted claims to the Montana Petroleum Tank Release Compensation Board for reimbursement for corrective action costs. The insurer denied the claim, and after the company subrogated the claim to the Board, the Board sought reimbursement from the insurer, but the insurer denied all reimbursement requests, so the Board sued to recover corrective costs from the insurer. The District Court concluded that diesel fuel was a pollutant and that coverage was therefore excluded under the commercial general liability portion of the policy. On appeal, the Board asserted that the court erred in denying coverage, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The terms of the pollution exclusion clause were not ambiguous, and when viewed from the objective perspective of the average consumer, diesel fuel was properly included in the definition of pollutant. The District Court correctly denied coverage under the commercial general liability portion of the policy disclaiming coverage for spills resulting from pollutants. Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. Crumleys, Inc., 2008 MT 2, 341 M 33, 174 P3d 948 (2008).

Application of Improper Paint to Water Treatment Center Pipes — Definition of Physical Injury in Context of Commercial General Liability Insurance Contract: Plaintiff entered a contract with the city of Libby for construction of a water treatment plant. Plaintiff then entered a subcontract with defendant to paint the filter tanks and pipes at the plant. Plaintiff was listed as an additional insured on defendant's commercial general liability insurance policy. Defendant used an improper paint, and the city sued plaintiff as the general contractor for repainting costs. The insurer refused to defend or indemnify plaintiff, claiming that policy exclusions precluded coverage for the city's claim. Plaintiff successfully argued in District Court that the exclusions applied only to defendant as the named insured. On appeal, the Supreme Court considered whether the policy language referring to physical injury to tangible property covered the application of improper paint, concluding that the policy applied. Physical injury refers to a physical and material alteration resulting in a detriment. The policy covered property damage, including loss of use, and application of the improper paint physically and materially altered the tanks and pipes, resulting in a detriment to the city. The District Court was affirmed. Swank Enterprises, Inc. v. All Purpose Serv., Ltd., 2007 MT 57, 336 M 197, 154 P3d 52 (2007), following Lindsay Drilling v. USF&G, 208 M 91, 676 P2d 203 (1984). Clause in Insurance Policy Excluding Coverage for Transported Property Valid: Plaintiffs were transporting snowmobiles on a trailer when they were involved in a multiple vehicle accident that resulted in damage to their vehicle and the destruction of the trailer and snowmobiles. The insurer covered the loss of the trailer, but declined to compensate for the loss of the snowmobiles on grounds that they were excluded from policy coverage, and plaintiffs filed suit to recover damages. The District Court held that the policy exclusion for damage to property being transported was valid and granted the insurer summary judgment. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the policy provision violated 61-6-301, which mandates motor vehicle insurance. The Supreme Court agreed that an exclusion to mandatory coverage is void and unenforceable absent a statutory exclusion, but then noted that the statutory exclusion in 61-6-103 allows a policy exclusion for damage to property transported by the insured. The court held that the exclusion in 61-6-103 is not inconsistent with the purpose and intent of 61-6-301 and that because the policy provision was not void, there was no genuine issue of material fact and summary judgment was proper. Grimsrud v. Hagel, 2005 MT 194, 328 M 142, 119 P3d 47 (2005). See also Bain v. Gleason, 223 M 442, 726 P2d 1153 (1986), and Stutzman v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 284 M 372, 945 P2d 32 (1997).

Coverage Under Products Completed Operations Hazard Policy Inapplicable When Work Never Completed: Defendant had a products completed operations hazard policy with plaintiff insurer that triggered coverage when all contracted work was completed or when part of the work completed was put to its intended use but future service, maintenance, correction, repair, or replacement might be required. A complaint against defendant alleged that despite repeated requests and promises, the work in question was never completed. Because the work was not completed, materials were not installed, labor was not performed, and the system that was installed was inadequate for the intended purpose, coverage pursuant to defendant's products completed operations hazard policy did not apply. The reasonable expectations doctrine was also inapplicable because the policy language excluded such coverage. Generali-U.S. Branch v. Alexander, 2004 MT 81, 320 M 450, 87 P3d 1000 (2004), following Wellcome v. Home Ins. Co., 257 M 354, 849 P2d 190 (1993).

No Duty to Defend Property Damage or Fraud Claim When No Property Damage or Fraud Asserted: Defendant contended that plaintiff insurer had a duty to defend and provide coverage under defendant's commercial general liability policy, which provided coverage for property damages. However, the claim did not seek compensation for property damages for physical injury to tangible property, but rather for sums fraudulently paid to defendant based on a breach of contract. Because allegations in the complaint did not set forth facts that brought the event within the policy provisions and specifically excluded coverage for a fraud claim, the insurer had no duty to defend the claim. Generali-U.S. Branch v. Alexander, 2004 MT 81, 320 M 450, 87 P3d 1000 (2004), following Graber v. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 244 M 265, 797 P2d 214 (1990).

Bodily Injury Not Inclusive of Emotional or Psychological Injury Within Terms of Uninsured Motorist Policy: Jacobsen was driving a car insured by defendant when he stopped to assist another motorist who was unconscious with a bleeding head wound. Despite Jacobsen's ministrations, the motorist died a few days later, and the cause was determined to be suicide. The next year, Jacobsen began seeking treatment for emotional distress suffered as a result of the incident and filed a claim with defendant to recover uninsured motorist benefits and medical pay benefits. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendant, and Jacobsen appealed on grounds that his policy for uninsured motorist coverage included damages for bodily injury sustained by the insured caused by an accident. The Supreme Court held that the term "bodily injury" was not ambiguous and was limited to physical injury caused by an accident but did not include emotional or psychological injuries. Thus, Jacobsen's emotional injury, including resulting physical manifestations, did not constitute bodily injury as defined in the insurance contract and was not compensable. Jacobsen v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 72, 320 M 375, 87 P3d 995 (2004), following Bain v. Gleason, 223 M 442, 726 P2d 1153 (1986), and Aetna Life & Cas. Co. v. First Sec. Bank of Bozeman, 662 F. Supp. 1126 (D.C. Mont. 1987). Jacobsen was overruled in Allstate Ins. Co. v. Wagner-Ellsworth, 2008 MT 240, 344 M 445, 188 P3d 1042 (2008), to the extent that bodily injuries include mental or psychological injuries that are accompanied by physical manifestations.

No Dual Residency in Montana Despite Joint Custody Provisions — Affidavit Indicating Future Residency Intent Irrelevant: When the parties were divorced in Nevada, physical custody of their child was granted to the mother, who continued to reside with the child in Nevada, and Umland moved to Montana, having been granted visitation rights. When the child died in an automobile accident, Umland attempted to collect a settlement under his insurance policy, which provided coverage for relatives who were residents of the insured's household. As proof that the child was a resident of Montana, Umland submitted an affidavit asserting that the child had indicated an intent to reside with Umland. The District Court disallowed the affidavit and held that the policy did not apply because the child was not a resident. On appeal, Umland argued that because 1-1-215 establishes a minor's residence as the residence of the parent having legal custody and because Montana allows for joint custody, it naturally followed that Montana allows dual residency. The Supreme Court disagreed. Montana law provides that there may be only one residence. The child customarily resided with the mother and thus was a Nevada resident. Further, the affidavit indicating the child's intent to reside in Montana in the future was irrelevant because the child was a Nevada resident at the time of death. Umland v. Nat'l Cas. Co., 2003 MT 356, 319 M 16, 81 P3d 500 (2003).

Failure of Insurer to Pay Within Sixty-Day Period Specified in Insurance Contract — No Error in Interpretation of Contract: An insurance contract required the insurer to pay for a loss within 60 days after the insurer received proof of loss and: (1) the parties reached an agreement; (2) there was a final judgment; or (3) the insured filed an appraisal with the insurer. The insured sought money damages because the claim was not paid within the 60-day period following the joint appraisal, which resulted in plaintiffs' alleged mental anguish and emotional distress. However, given a lengthy dispute over the amount of damages, the significant disparity between estimates, and plaintiffs' rejection of the joint appraisal, the District Court found that the agreement contemplated by the contract that would trigger the 60-day payment period was never reached. Plaintiffs appealed on grounds that the District Court misinterpreted the contract. The Supreme Court affirmed. The rejected joint appraisal did not constitute an agreement. Because the contractual requirements for the 60-day payment period were not met, the District Court did not err when it declined to conclude that the insurer should have made payment within 60 days of the joint appraisal. Nelson v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 2003 MT 101, 315 M 268, 68 P3d 689 (2003).

Employer's Liability Exclusion Provision Barring Coverage for Claims Arising From Employee's Death: Defendant's employee was killed in an on-the-job accident, and the employee's spouse sued for damages. Defendant's insurance policy contained an employer's liability exclusion provision that excluded liability for bodily injury to employees of the insured. The District Court found that the employee's injuries were excepted from coverage under the exclusion provisions of the policy, but the spouse appealed on grounds that the exclusion applied only to injuries sustained by leased workers, that the employer reasonably expected that the insurer would defend employment-related claims not precluded by the workers' compensation exclusivity rule, and that the employer's conduct, which contributed to the injury, did not satisfy the definition of intentional act for purposes of the intentional act exclusion provision in the insurance policy, rendering the exclusion inapplicable. The Supreme Court noted that the pivotal issue was whether the liability exclusion was clear and unambiguous and concluded that because it was, the remaining issues would not be addressed. A common sense interpretation of the term "employee" would lead the average consumer of insurance to understand that the term clearly and unambiguously refers to all persons engaged in services for wages and salary by another, and because the injured worker was an employee, the employer's liability exclusion provision barred coverage for that worker's injuries. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Horton, 2003 MT 79, 315 M 43, 67 P3d 285 (2003).

Denial of General Liability Coverage Based on Liquor Liability Exclusion — Failure to Raise Alternative Negligence Theory — Summary Judgment Proper: Cusenbary was injured when a bar patron drove a car through the wall of Mortensen's tavern. Mortensen was covered by USF&G Co. under a general liability policy, but the insurance included a liquor liability exclusion. When Mortensen tendered the claim to USF&G Co. for defense, the company denied coverage and refused to defend based on the exclusion, so Cusenbary's claim was tried to a jury and Mortensen was found guilty of negligence (see Cusenbary v. Mortensen, 1999 MT 221, 296 M 25, 987 P2d 351 (1999)). Mortensen then assigned all rights to coverage under the general liability policy to Cusenbary. Cusenbary then sued USF&G Co., contending that the company had a duty to indemnify Mortensen for negligent behavior in management of the bar, separate from the negligent conduct of serving alcohol to an intoxicated patron, because the separate conduct was not excluded by the liquor liability exclusion. The District Court granted summary judgment for USF&G Co., holding that the separate conduct related directly to the improper service or sale of alcohol and that Mortensen failed to set forth evidence supporting an alternative negligence theory, so as a matter of law, Mortensen's judgment was excluded by the express language of the policy. The Supreme Court affirmed, citing Sheffield Ins. Co. v. Lighthouse Properties, Inc., 234 M 395, 763 P2d 669 (1988). All claims and arguments at trial were related to Mortensen's negligence in serving alcohol, and no assertion was ever made that the proposed evidence was relevant to any other theory of negligence or to any other theory. All of the claims arose from serving alcohol and were thus excluded from coverage. Cusenbary v. USF&G Co., 2001 MT 261, 307 M 238, 37 P3d 67 (2001).

"Other Insurance" Clause Upheld to Deny Unjust Enrichment: Summers purchased a homeowner's policy from American and 2 years later purchased an additional policy from National without canceling his first policy. The home was subsequently burned, and Summers filed a claim with American. When American learned of the policy with National, National filed an interpleader action with the District Court and deposited its policy limit of $77,000, to which both American and Summers claimed entitlement. The American policy contained explicit language that the policy terminated upon the purchase of the subsequent policy by Summers. Relying on the public policy enunciated in automobile insurance stacking cases, Summers argued that the "other insurance" clause in American's policy was void as a matter of public policy. See Bennett v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 261 M 386, 862 P2d 1146 (1993). The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that stacking automobile policies was allowed in order to ensure that victims receive adequate compensation but that in the case before it, Summers could not demonstrate that the compensation received from National did not fully cover his loss and therefore American did not have to pay the homeowner a second time for the loss and was only liable to Summers for the premiums collected after Summers obtained the National policy. The Supreme Court also disagreed with Summer's claim that pursuant to 33-24-102, the actual value of the property could not be ascertained and therefore the coverage of both policies should be taken as conclusively showing the value of the property. The Supreme Court stated that because it had already found that American's policy terminated automatically under the "other insurance" clause, when Summers purchased the second policy, 33-24-102 was inapplicable. Nat'l. Cas. Co. v. Am. Bankers Ins. Co. of Fla., 2001 MT 28, 304 M 163, 19 P3d 223, (2001).

Purchase of Separate, Specific Motor Vehicle Policy Not Considered to Terminate Coverage as After-Acquired Vehicle Under Prior Policy: Prior to purchasing a Ford Escort, Fitzpatrick had a liability policy (policy one) in effect that provided coverage of $500,000 per occurrence, identified three vehicles as insured, and provided similar coverage for any newly acquired car obtained during the policy period, but only until Fitzpatrick asked for insurance on the newly acquired vehicle and paid any required additional premium or within 30 days of purchase, whichever was shorter. After buying the Escort and within the required time, Fitzpatrick requested a separate policy (policy two) for that vehicle, with coverage of $100,000 per occurrence, but was never billed for any additional premium. Both policies were in effect when Christensen was injured while riding in the Escort. The insurer claimed that $100,000 was available under policy two and tendered that amount to pay health care providers and the various claimants. Christensen asked the District Court to conclude that additional coverage was available under the "after-acquired vehicle" provision in policy one, asserting that both policies should be stacked to provide a total of $600,000 of coverage. The District Court relied on Bramlett v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 468 P2d 157 (Kans. 1970), and Beck v. Aetna Cas. & Surety Co., 553 P2d 397 (Colo. 1976), in holding that the purpose of after-acquired vehicle coverage is to provide automatic coverage only until coverage on the new vehicle is obtained, that because a separate, specific policy had been requested, the Escort was not an after-acquired vehicle under policy one, and that therefore coverage should be limited to $100,000. The Supreme Court distinguished Bramlett and Beck because the policy language in those cases was not the same and found the reasoning in Carey v. St. Farm Mut. Ins. Co., 367 F2d 938 (4th Cir. 1966), to be more persuasive. In the present case, the policy did not require Fitzpatrick to elect coverage if more than one policy was applicable, as it did in Bramlett and Beck. Rather, as in Carey, the clear policy language expressly extended coverage to all after-acquired vehicles, provided that notice was timely. Therefore, the District Court erred when it concluded that the purchase of specific coverage under policy two terminated coverage as an after-acquired vehicle under policy one. If other conditions of after-acquired vehicle coverage are met, coverage on the newly acquired vehicle attaches at the time of acquisition and for the policy period unless the insured refuses to pay any additional premium that is requested, which she was not. Further, Fitzpatrick's policy limiting the maximum amount recoverable to the highest applicable limit under any one policy, when more than one company policy applied to the same occurrence, was found to comport with Montana's antistacking provisions in 33-23-203. The highest applicable limit in this case was $500,000 under policy one, of which $400,000 remained, and the case was reversed to make the additional money available. Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624, 57 St. Rep. 1608 (2000).

Automobile Exclusion Held Applicable — No Duty to Defend: Dawn was driving the personal automobile of her father, Gerald, who was insured by Employers Mutual Casualty Company (EMC) both individually and as an officer and employee of Brabeck Construction, Inc. (BCI), when she was involved in an accident with Lesmeister. BCI itself was also insured by EMC. Lesmeister sued Gerald and BCI, alleging that Dawn was operating the vehicle at the express direction of Gerald for BCI business purposes, that Dawn was an employee of BCI, and that the doctrine of respondeat superior applied. EMC refused to defend, citing a standard automobile exclusion that excepted entrustment of a vehicle to another person. The District Court concluded that the definition of "insured" was ambiguous, construed the policy against the insurer, and held that EMC had a duty to defend. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that although BCI and Gerald were named insureds, the automobile exclusion, particularly the exclusion for the entrustment of an automobile to another person, was unambiguous and that EMC had no duty to defend. Brabeck v. Employers Mut. Cas. Co., 2000 MT 373, 303 M 468, 16 P3d 355, 57 St. Rep. 1596 (2000).

Motor Vehicle Liability Policy Language Not Ambiguous in Failing to Define "Accident" — Maximum Coverage in Accident Involving Multiple Liable Insureds: Appellants argued that an insured's policy was ambiguous in that it did not define the word "accident", contending that alleged negligent driving that caused a rollover accident and another person's alleged negligence in permitting the driver to use the vehicle constituted two separate accidents under the policy, giving rise to separate coverage, each with a $50,000 limit. The policy provided that regardless of the number of insured vehicles, insured persons, claims or policies, or vehicles involved in the accident, the insurer would pay no more than the limit of liability for each person injured in any one accident. The District Court concluded, and the Supreme Court agreed, that under the terms of the policy, the maximum amount paid by the insurer remained constant and the fact that an accident involved multiple liable insureds was inconsequential. Although "accident" was not defined, a reasonable person in the position of an insured would understand that the word refers to a singular event in which bodily injury or property damage results from the ownership, maintenance, or use of a vehicle. There was only one accident, and the District Court correctly concluded that although more than one act of negligence may have contributed, the maximum amount of coverage under the policy remained constant. Infinity Ins. Co. v. Dodson, 2000 MT 287, 302 M 209, 14 P3d 487, 57 St. Rep. 1196 (2000).

Plain Language of Policies Providing Insurance on Rental Car Construed — Primary Versus Excess Coverage: Hudson used a credit card to rent a 1995 Ford Mustang convertible from P.C. Rental, Inc. (P.C.). Three days later, Hudson lost control of the car, resulting in damages rendering the vehicle a total loss. At the time of the accident, P.C. had a commercial lines policy through Empire Fire and Marine Insurance Company (Empire) that included liability and physical damage coverage. Hudson did not own a vehicle and was not covered under a personal policy, but auto rental insurance was provided by the company whose credit card Hudson used for the rental. Empire paid P.C. the agreed actual cash value of the vehicle, minus a $1,000 policy deductible, then sold the damaged vehicle for salvage and received an additional $1,108. The credit card company, Visa U.S.A. (Visa), also paid P.C. about $7,800 to cover P.C.'s deductible and lost rental fees. P.C. then brought a breach of contract action against Hudson for failing to return the vehicle in the same condition in which it was rented, as required by the rental agreement. Hudson alleged that Chase Manhattan Bank (Chase), as issuer of the credit card, was responsible for damages sustained to the rental car under the terms of the rental insurance. Hudson subsequently filed for bankruptcy and assigned all rights in the third-party action against Chase to P.C. P.C. then amended the complaint to include the credit card company as defendant, alleging that the rental insurance provided coverage on a 24-hour basis for damage to a car rented with the credit card up to the full value of the car. Visa denied P.C.'s allegations regarding the rental insurance, alleged that Visa had met its obligations under the policy by covering P.C.'s deductible and lost rental fees, and moved for summary judgment, which was granted. The District Court concluded that Hudson was an insured under the liability policy provided to P.C. by Empire and thus Empire was not entitled to subrogate against its own insured. The court determined that because both policies provided damage coverage for the same vehicle, it was necessary to look to the "other insurance" clauses of the policies. The Empire policy stated that its coverage was primary, while the Visa policy stated that its coverage was excess coverage, so Empire was not entitled to recover any of the amount that it paid to P.C. from Visa. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Given the nature of the coverage available, no determination of whether Hudson was an insured under Empire's physical damage coverage was necessary or possible under the policies. The District Court did not err when it concluded that, based on the clear language of the policies, P.C.'s physical damage coverage was primary and Visa's rental insurance was excess. P.C. Rental, Inc. v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 2000 MT 106, 299 M 315, 998 P2d 1168, 57 St. Rep. 430 (2000).

"Arising Out of" Ambiguous — Coverage for Liability Not Excluded: Pablos were injured in a vehicle accident involving Moore, who was transporting a landscaping tractor for his employer. The employer was covered by a commercial general liability insurance policy that provided liability insurance for negligent acts of the corporation and its employees. Pablos contended that the employer was negligent in the hiring, training, and supervision of Moore. The employer conceded that the claim arose during the policy period and fell within the definitions of "bodily injury" and "occurrence" and that the policy would provide coverage unless coverage was denied by an exclusion but contended that coverage was excluded under both the exclusion for damages "arising out of" the use of an automobile and the exclusion for damages "arising out of" the transportation of mobile equipment. The District Court held that the term "arising out of" was ambiguous and, construing the instrument against the drafter-insurer, ruled that coverage for Pablos' accident was not excluded under the policy language. Noting that the phrase "arising out of" has been declared ambiguous in another insurance context in Wendell v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 1999 MT 17, 293 M 140, 974 P2d 623 (1999), the Supreme Court applied a similar rationale to the phrase in both exclusionary clauses at issue in the present case. The phrase was reasonably subject to more than one interpretation and thus ambiguous. Pursuant to Head v. Cent. Reserve Life of N. America Ins. Co., 256 M 188, 845 P2d 735, 50 St. Rep. 20 (1993), if the terms of an insurance policy are ambiguous, obscure, or open to different constructions, the construction most favorable to the insured or other beneficiary must prevail, particularly if an ambiguous provision attempts to exclude the liability of the insurer. Here, the policy did not clearly and unambiguously exclude coverage for the theories of liability pleaded by Pablos, and the District Court's summary judgment that coverage was owed on Pablos' claims for negligent hiring, training, and supervision of Moore was affirmed. Pablo v. Moore, 2000 MT 48, 298 M 393, 995 P2d 460, 57 St. Rep. 231 (2000), following Marquis v. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 961 P2d 1213 (Kans. 1998).

Wrongful Discharge Suit — No Duty to Defend Under Unambiguous Liability Insurance Policy: Plaintiff filed an action against the insurer after the insurer refused to defend and indemnify it in a wrongful discharge action under a liability insurance policy that contained an unambiguous combined provisions endorsement and a professional liability provision. The court concluded that the combined provisions endorsement must be read along with the professional liability provisions. As a result, the insurer is not bound by the liability insurance policy to defend and indemnify the plaintiff in a wrongful discharge suit. Counterpoint, Inc. v. Essex Ins. Co., 1998 MT 251, 291 M 189, 967 P2d 393, 55 St. Rep. 1035 (1998).

Underinsured Motor Vehicle Defined — Policy Exclusion of Husband's Vehicle as Vehicle of "Relative" Upheld — Exclusion Not Contrary to Public Policy or Reasonable Expectations of Insured: Stutzman was injured in a one-car accident when her husband, John Turcotte, negligently lost control of his vehicle. Stutzman, who, along with Turcotte, was an insured in a policy written by Safeco, sued Safeco in an attempt to collect the underinsured motorist benefits provided in the policy. In its defense, Safeco raised the policy definition of an "underinsured motor vehicle" that excluded a motor vehicle owned by a "relative" of an insured. Citing decisions from other jurisdictions, the Supreme Court held that because Turcotte was married to Stutzman at the time of the accident, Turcotte was Stutzman's "relative" within the meaning of the exclusion applicable to the underinsured motorist benefits of the policy and that the exclusion applied even though exclusions are generally to be narrowly construed against the insurer. The Supreme Court also held that although a court may invalidate an exclusion that violates Montana's mandatory insurance law, there is no requirement in Montana law for underinsured motorist coverage and, moreover, that public policy should uphold the exclusion because an insured could otherwise substitute less expensive underinsured motorist coverage for more expensive liability coverage. Further, citing Wellcome v. Home Ins. Co., 257 M 354, 849 P2d 190 (1993), the Supreme Court held that the doctrine of reasonable expectations of the insured is inapplicable when the terms of the policy clearly demonstrate an intent to exclude coverage. Stutzman v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 284 M 372, 945 P2d 32, 54 St. Rep. 925 (1997). See also Counterpoint, Inc. v. Essex Ins. Co., 1998 MT 251, 291 M 189, 967 P2d 393, 55 St. Rep. 1035 (1998).

Automobile Insurance — Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress — "Each Person" and "Each Accident" Coverage: While riding a bicycle, Carolyn's husband was struck by a car driven by Hintz. State Farm, Hintz's insurer, paid the estate of Carolyn's husband $25,000. Carolyn witnessed the accident and claimed that because she had an independent cause of action against Hintz, she was subject to the insurance policy limitation of $50,000 for "each accident" and not the $25,000 for "each person". The "each person" coverage was limited to that amount of damages caused to another resulting from bodily injury to one person. Citing Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), the Supreme Court held that because Carolyn had an independent cause of action, which was not derivative in the same manner as claims for loss of consortium, Carolyn was subject to the "each accident" limitation and not the limit applicable to "each person". Treichel v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 280 M 443, 930 P2d 661, 54 St. Rep. 1 (1997).

Applicability of Newly Acquired Property Provision — "Acquire": John Deere Insurance Company (Deere) claimed that it had not provided insurance coverage for certain logging equipment pursuant to the newly acquired property provision of its insurance policy because the loss occurred before the purchaser notified Deere of the equipment and after the 30-day notice provision of the policy had expired. In determining whether coverage applied, the Supreme Court interpreted the term "acquire" in this case as requiring a showing of some vested interest or substantial ownership in property, something more than a temporary possession. Citing N. Assurance Co. v. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 808 P2d 911 (Kans. Ct. App. 1991), the court noted that the newly acquired coverage clause is offered as a convenience to the insured and that its purpose is to broaden coverage to provide protection at the earliest possible time needed by the insured. Because the purchaser had a 1-week trial period during which insurance was provided by the seller, the time period for application of the newly acquired property provision did not begin running until after the trial period. Thus, Deere was responsible for coverage during the 30-day notice period. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 277 M 134, 920 P2d 97, 53 St. Rep. 618 (1996). On remand, defendant was entitled to present proof to the jury that third-party defendant, which had been sanctioned for prosecuting a meritless appeal, was involved in a continuing course of bad faith postjudgment conduct, and proof of that conduct was admissible to prove malice. Third-party defendant's alleged failure to conduct a reasonable investigation and its subsequent refusal to pay the claim, although occurring more than 2 years before commencement of plaintiff's cause of action, were, if proved, ostensibly part of the bad faith postjudgment conduct. The evidence of those acts was not time-barred. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 288, 297 M 33, 991 P2d 915, 56 St. Rep. 1152 (1999).

Ambiguous Family Member Automobile Liability Exclusion Construed Against Insurer: The U.S. District Court for the District of Montana certified a question to the Montana Supreme Court that arose in two consolidated cases. In each case, a family member was injured in an automobile accident as the result of the negligence of another family member, and in each case, the insurer relied upon exclusions that purported to deny liability to an insured, beyond that required by 61-6-301, for injuries caused to another family member. The U.S. District Court asked whether the amendatory endorsements relied upon in each case were valid and enforceable. The Supreme Court held that the endorsements were not valid and enforceable because the language relied upon by the insurers was ambiguous. Citing Worldwide Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Brady, 973 F2d 192 (3rd Cir. 1992), the Supreme Court held that the question of ambiguity must be resolved from the standpoint of a consumer of average intelligence not trained in law or the insurance business and that the policies in question were subject to more than one interpretation regarding the extent of the coverage for damage to a household member. The Supreme Court also held that the remainder of the policies should be enforced according to their terms, giving the insureds the benefit of the value of the policies with no applicable exclusion. Leibrand v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 272 M 1, 898 P2d 1220, 52 St. Rep. 557 (1995), discussed in Stutzman v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 284 M 372, 945 P2d 32, 54 St. Rep. 925 (1997), and followed in Iwen v. U.S. W. Direct, 1999 MT 63, 293 M 512, 977 P2d 989, 56 St. Rep. 263 (1999). However, see Fisher v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 208, 371 Mont. 147, 305 P.3d 861, granting summary judgment to insurer when family member exclusion in policy is not ambiguous, followed in Meadow Brook, LLP v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 2014 MT 190, 375 Mont. 509, 329 P.3d 608.

Cost of Asbestos Removal Covered in Policy — Narrow Construction of Policy Exclusions: A "code exclusion" clause in a policy issued on a commercial building relieved insurer of any obligation to pay additional costs for the removal of debris from a fire-damaged building when the cost of removal was increased because of regulatory restrictions. Insurer claimed exemption when the cost of removal was increased because the debris contained asbestos, a substance subject to legal regulation. However, coverage exclusions are contrary to the fundamental protective purpose of an insurance policy and are therefore subject to a rule of narrow construction. Noting that the policy as drafted affirmatively extended coverage for debris removal and that the asbestos in question was considered debris as a result of fire damage, the Supreme Court held that insurer was liable contractually and that the exclusion was inapplicable. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Oakland, 251 M 352, 825 P2d 554, 49 St. Rep. 72 (1992), following Garnett v. Transamerica Ins.

Serv., 800 P2d 656 (Idaho 1990), and followed in Newman v. Scottsdale Ins. Co., 2013 MT 125, 370 Mont. 133, 301 P.3d 348.

Determination of "Resident of Insured's Household" — Boatright Analysis: The Supreme Court adopted the analysis set out in Iowa Nat'l Mut. Ins. Co. v. Boatright, 516 P2d 439 (Colo. App. 1973), in designating factors important in ascertaining the meaning of the term "resident of the insured's household", including: (1) the subjective or declared intent of the individual; (2) the formality or informality of the relationship between the individual and the members of the household; (3) the existence of another place of lodging by the alleged resident; and (4) the relative permanence or transient nature of the individual's residence in the household. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Blair, 250 M 52, 817 P2d 1156, 48 St. Rep. 877 (1991).

Home Owner's Insurance Automobile Exclusion Inapplicable to Underlying Negligence Action: An automobile exclusion in a home owner's policy that excluded from coverage incidents arising from the use, loading, or unloading of a vehicle did not apply to a shooting incident that occurred during a party inside a house after the passenger had left his car, even though the gun was stored in the car prior to the shooting. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Blair, 250 M 52, 817 P2d 1156, 48 St. Rep. 877 (1991), distinguishing Wyo. Farm Bureau Ins. Co. v. Mobile Ins. Co., 467 F2d 990 (10th Cir. 1972), and Colo. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. W. Am. Ins. Co., 540 P2d 1112 (Colo. App. 1975).

Duty to Defend — "Bodily Injury" — "Occurrence": In a federal action based upon diversity jurisdiction in which an insurer sought a declaration of the scope of coverage under an insurance policy, the District Court held that the policy included coverage for "bodily injury". The insured's complaint alleges she suffered such injury. Consequently, the insurer has a duty to defend because the complaint alleges facts that, if proven, would result in coverage. It is the insured's claim that determines the insurer's duty to defend and not whether the injured party can prove an action against the insured for damages. The District Court held that the term "occurrence" as defined in the policy is unambiguous and includes unintended bodily injury, although the insured's operative conduct was intentional. Mut. Serv. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Co-op Supply, Inc. of Dillon, 699 F. Supp. 1438, 45 St. Rep. 2416 (D.C. Mont. 1988).

Scope of Coverage — "Property Damage": In a federal action for wrongful discharge based upon diversity jurisdiction in which an insurer sought a declaration of the scope of coverage under an insurance policy, the District Court held that the term "property damage" that included only damage to "tangible property" does not include loss of past and future salary, loss of health benefits, and other benefits of employment because those are intangible economic losses. Mut. Serv. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Co-op Supply, Inc. of Dillon, 699 F. Supp. 1438, 45 St. Rep. 2416 (D.C. Mont. 1988).

Umbrella Policy — Duty to Defend: In a federal action for wrongful discharge based upon diversity jurisdiction in which an insurer sought a declaration of the scope of coverage under an umbrella insurance policy, the District Court held that the insured's allegations in her complaint of "bodily injury" fall within the scope of coverage under the "personal injury" portion of the policy and therefore create a duty to defend. Mut. Serv. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Co-op Supply, Inc. of Dillon, 699 F. Supp. 1438, 45 St. Rep. 2416 (D.C. Mont. 1988).

Discharge From Employment — Injury to Be Expected — Intentional Conduct Exclusion Applied: Employee claimed he was intentionally fired for refusing to violate Montana law, resulting in emotional and mental injury. The employer tendered the suit to National Surety Corporation, which refused to defend on grounds that the policy did not provide coverage for an occurrence of this sort. The District Court agreed, and the Supreme Court affirmed on the basis that the claimed injury fell outside the definition of "occurrence". Although an intentional act may constitute an occurrence when the alleged injury was not the expected or intended result of the conduct, here there was no injury alleged that could not be expected to flow from the termination. Therefore, the intentional conduct exclusion was properly applied. Daly Ditches Irrigation District v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 234 M 537, 764 P2d 1276, 45 St. Rep. 2112 (1988), distinguishing Lindsay Drilling v. USF&G, 208 M 91, 676 P2d 203 (1984); Millers Mut. Ins. Co. v. Strainer, 204 M 162, 663 P2d 338 (1983); and NW. Cas. Co. v. Phelan, 182 M 448, 597 P2d 720 (1979). See also Mary & Alice Ford Nursing Home v. Fireman's Ins., 446 N.Y.S.2d 599 (1982), and Commercial Union Ins. Co. v. Superior Court, 242 Cal. Rptr. 454, 196 Cal. App. 3d 1205 (1987).

Liquor Liability Provision Unambiguous — No Separate Theory of Negligence: The plaintiff, injured by an automobile driver served liquor by the defendant tavern owner, sued the owner on negligence theory. The plaintiff argued that the tavern owner's liability based on negligence is distinguished from liability based on the sale or service of liquor. The court disagreed, holding that summary judgment was proper because the insurance policy provision excluding liquor liability coverage was clear and unambiguous and all claims against the tavern owner relate to the sale or service of liquor. Sheffield Ins. Co. v. Lighthouse Properties, Inc., 234 M 395, 763 P2d 669, 45 St. Rep. 1999 (1988). An amended complaint was later filed that attempted to set forth an additional theory of liability not based on the sale of alcohol. The theory was that an ordinary duty of due care was owed the bar patron based on his status as business invitee and that the bartender breached that duty by allowing patron to leave the bar in the company of an obviously intoxicated person. However, the amended complaint was still based on actions related to the sale of alcohol and was therefore barred by res judicata. The District Court did not err when it held that the insurance policy also excluded liability for acts alleged in the amended complaint. Sheffield Ins. Co. v. Lighthouse Properties, Inc., 252 M 321, 828 P2d 1369, 49 St. Rep. 274 (1992), followed in Cusenbary v. USF&G Co., 2001 MT 261, 307 M 238, 37 P3d 67 (2001).

"Severance" of Limb Construed: A personal accident insurance policy providing coverage for loss of limb described "loss" as "actual severance through or above the wrist or ankle joints". In deciding whether a severed spinal cord that resulted in total loss of use of both legs constituted "loss" under the policy, the Supreme Court adopted the reasoning of the Washington Supreme Court as outlined in Neer v. Fireman's Fund, Am. Life Ins. Co., 692 P2d 830 (1985). Severance does not mean amputation or dismemberment, but rather accidental loss resulting from severance of some portion of the body through or above the ankle. Bauer v. Kar Prod., Inc., 230 M 422, 749 P2d 1385, 45 St. Rep. 322 (1988).

Exclusionary Clauses Regarding Faulty Workmanship Not Ambiguous: The exclusionary clauses in a comprehensive general liability insurance policy excluded coverage for property damage to the named insured's products and for property damage to work performed by or on behalf of the named insured. The Supreme Court, affirming the District Court's reliance on Stillwater Condominium Ass'n v. Am. Home Assur. Co., 508 F. Supp. 1075 (D.C. Mont. 1981), found the exclusions were unambiguous in eliminating coverage for repair or replacement of the insured's own faulty workmanship and that the underwriting policy sought to be articulated by the exclusionary clauses was widely recognized as a valid limitation upon standard, readily available liability insurance coverage. Taylor-McDonnell Constr. Co. v. Commercial Union Ins. Co., 229 M 34, 744 P2d 892, 44 St. Rep. 1757 (1987).

Consortium Claim Subject to "Each Person" Limit of Liability Coverage: Under mandatory motor vehicle insurance coverage statutes, husband's cause of action for consortium and wife's cause of action for bodily injuries are subject to the "one person limitation" set forth in 61-6-103 as referred to in 61-6-301. The policy in question does not extend coverage beyond the statutory requirements. Therefore, husband is not entitled to recover from the insurance company an amount over the limit specified for one person for consequential damages to himself resulting from injuries to his wife, such as loss of her services or consortium. Bain v. Gleason, 223 M 442, 726 P2d 1153, 43 St. Rep. 1897 (1986), distinguished in Treichel v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 280 M 443, 930 P2d 661, 54 St. Rep. 1 (1997).

Improper Denial of Malpractice Insurance — Claim Filed Within Policy Period: The Internal Revenue Service (I.R.S.) notified Walker that attorney Larson had underestimated the amount of estate tax owed by the estate. Larson's insurance company denied coverage, stating that Larson had failed to extend coverage to include claims reported after the policy expiration date. Walker filed malpractice, bad faith, and unfair trade practice claims against Larson. The District Court denied both Larson's and the insurance company's motions to dismiss and subsequently granted judgment in favor of the company. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, stating that under the authority of Link v. Cont. Cas. Co., 470 F2d 1133 (9th Cir. 1972), the ambiguity surrounding the term "claim" would be construed against the insurer. Walker had filed her claim against Larson within the policy period. Walker v. Larson, 223 M 333, 727 P2d 1321, 43 St. Rep. 1765 (1986).

Insurance Policy Clause Unambiguous: Home owners' insurance policy clause clearly and unambiguously covered only vehicles that met both requirements set forth in the provision. Therefore, the clause was within the general rule that when a contract is reduced to writing, the intent of the parties is ascertained from the writing alone if possible. Payne v. Safeco Ins. Co., 222 M 198, 720 P2d 1197, 43 St. Rep. 1171 (1986).

Business Pursuits — Steer-Roping Contest: Insured's policy on his ranch excluded business pursuits other than, among other things, farming. For 3 years he held three or four steer-roping contests a year in an arena he built. Nonprofessionals paid a fee and there was prize money, with insured keeping some of the fee money. Insured's own testimony showed he was regularly engaged in the contests for profit and thus was engaged in a business pursuit excluded from policy coverage. A summary judgment for insurer was therefore proper in insured's suit for failure to defend insured and pay an injured steer roper because there was no issue of material fact. Heggen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 220 M 398, 715 P2d 1060, 43 St. Rep. 475 (1986).

"Business Pursuit" — Definition: Montana has not adopted criteria for determining what is a business pursuit for purposes of an insurance policy clause excluding a business pursuit from coverage. The presence of a profit motive (not actual profit) is one characteristic of a business pursuit, and continually or regularly conducted activity may be a business pursuit even though it is not the primary occupation of the insured. In this case, insured's testimony that he had income and expenses relating to the pursuit and claimed them on his tax returns established a profit motive. Heggen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 220 M 398, 715 P2d 1060, 43 St. Rep. 475 (1986).

Aircraft Insurance — Insuring Clause in Form — Typed Use Clause — No Ambiguity: Within the definition of "insured" in the insurance form relating to aircraft insurance, a person operating the aircraft under a rental agreement was expressly not covered; in an attached typewritten declaration of uses, rental to pilots was expressly set forth as a permitted use of the aircraft. The federal District Court held that the contract was not susceptible to two constructions and resolved the ambiguity against the insurance company. The two clauses covered different subjects, and there was nothing in the limitations on use of the aircraft clause that expanded the insuring clauses to provide coverage to those who were expressly excluded. Ideal Mut. Ins. Co. v. Patzer, 624 F. Supp. 426, 42 St. Rep. 2080 (1985).

Insurer Exemption for Intentional Bodily Injury: Insurer was properly granted a summary judgment on its claims that it had no obligation to defend or pay a judgment against the insured, who had struck a coworker in the face twice. The policy excluded bodily injury either expected or intended from the standpoint of the insured. Whether insured intended the specific injuries (left cheekbone broken in three places) was not a question of fact precluding summary judgment. When an assailant strikes another in the face, it is irrelevant for purposes of such an insurance exclusion that the assailant causes a different injury than he subjectively intended. The court will not impose upon the insurer the impossible task of proving that the insured specifically intended to break the victim's cheekbone in three places by striking him with his fist. Mut. Serv. Cas. Ins. Co. v. McGehee, 219 M 304, 711 P2d 826, 42 St. Rep. 2038 (1985), followed in Burns v. Underwriters Adjusting Co., 234 M 508, 765 P2d 712, 45 St. Rep. 2089 (1988), and in Am. States Ins. Co. v. Willoughby, 254 M 218, 836 P2d 37, 49 St. Rep. 708 (1992).

Death Resulting From Fall Caused by Loss of Consciousness — Accidental Death: Insured had coverage for injuries, including death, resulting directly, and independently of all other causes, from an accident and not resulting from disease. He had a history of losing consciousness caused by years of overindulgence in alcohol. This would not in itself have caused death, but he lost consciousness, fell, hit his head on a sidewalk, and died. The injury and death were accidental under the policy and were caused by his head hitting the sidewalk, not by his propensity to lose consciousness. Coverage under the policy was required. Pond v. N. Am. Life & Cas. Co., 215 M 428, 697 P2d 1360, 42 St. Rep. 515 (1985).

Construction of Exclusionary Clause — Findings Not Clearly Erroneous: District Court determined that arrangement by which insured purchased truck for use of son-in-law in exchange for free hauling of insured's hay and cattle was on a share expense basis, and as such not excluded from coverage under insurance policy provision that excluded coverage for lease or rental. Supreme Court affirmed District Court judgment and held that the policy clause was ambiguous, capable of at least two interpretations, and as such capable of construction against the insurance company. The District Court findings were not clearly erroneous and therefore must be sustained. Bauer Ranch, Inc. v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 215 M 153, 695 P2d 1307, 42 St. Rep. 255 (1985).

No Duty to Defend if No Coverage Under Policy: The insured's liability policy includes coverage for accidental occurrences but not for damage that is intentional or expected. The damage for which the insured claims coverage was expected and thus is not covered by the terms of the policy. The insurer has no duty to defend the insured if there is no liability to the insured under the policy provisions. USF&G v. Rae Volunteer Fire Co., 212 M 450, 688 P2d 1246, 41 St. Rep. 1857 (1984), followed in Burns v. Underwriters Adjusting Co., 234 M 508, 765 P2d 712, 45 St. Rep. 2089 (1988), and distinguishing NW. Nat'l Cas. Co. v. Phalen, 182 M 448, 597 P2d 720 (1979). Burns was followed in Brabeck v. Employers Mut. Cas. Co., 2000 MT 373, 303 M 468, 16 P3d 355, 57 St. Rep. 1596 (2000). See also Grimsrud v. Hagel, 2005 MT 194, 328 M 142, 119 P3d 47 (2005).

Policy Language Unambiguous: The insurer issued a liability policy to the insured, a volunteer fire company. The insured made the purposeful decision to cease fighting a residential fire because the dwelling owners were not members of the fire company. The insured sought coverage under the policy as to damages claimed by the dwelling owners when their home was destroyed by the fire. The insured fire company claimed the policy language was ambiguous as it did not name the specific person who could activate the provision concerning the expectations or intentions of the company; therefore, the doubt should be resolved in favor of the insured. The policy language was not ambiguous, and the insured's board chairman had authority to activate the exclusion provisions. As a consequence, the insured can have an "expectation" of property damage through its authorized officer, a cause of damage not covered by the terms of the policy. USF&G v. Rae Volunteer Fire Co., 212 M 450, 688 P2d 1246, 41 St. Rep. 1857 (1984).

Duty to Defend — Intentional Versus Negligent Damage — Covered Occurrence: Plaintiff was retained to drill test holes on placer claims. The claim owners refused to pay plaintiff, causing plaintiff to foreclose on a mechanics' lien. The claim owners then counterclaimed, alleging plaintiff had intentionally or negligently salted the test results. Plaintiff tendered defense of the counterclaim to his insurer, the defendant. Defendant refused to defend, contending the allegations of the counterclaim were not covered by the insurance policy. The policy excluded from coverage damage "intended from the standpoint of the insured". The Supreme Court held that if the salting was done by third parties as a result of plaintiff's negligence, the action was covered by the policy. The drilling expense and inherent production costs established an intrinsic value in the core samples. There was a tangible property loss within the policy's coverage. The counterclaim set forth a covered "occurrence" as defined in the policy, and defendant was obliged to defend the counterclaim. Lindsay Drilling v. USF&G, 208 M 91, 676 P2d 203, 41 St. Rep. 193 (1984).

Concurrent Causation — Overlapping Coverage — Ambiguity Construed Against Insurer: In 1979, PCBs leaked from a transformer stored at the plant of Pierce Packing Company and contaminated its feed products. Trial established that negligent operation of a Pierce garbage truck had damaged the stored transformer; this was a proximate cause of the accident in concurrence with the design of the plant. The District Court imposed maximum liability under both the general and automobile liability provisions of both the primary and excess liability insurance policies. On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals affirmed, holding that under Montana law, there could be overlapping coverage for concurrent causes and any ambiguity in the policies regarding coverage or limits should be construed against the insurers. Unigard Mut. Ins. Co. v. Abbott, 732 F2d 1414 (9th Cir. 1984).

Conflict Between Contract and Certificate of Insurance: Decedent's employer provided him with group life insurance and paid the total premium. Employer kept the master policy, which stated that the benefit paid would be 300% of annual salary at the time of death, rounded to the nearest dollar. A certificate of insurance not containing this formula was issued to decedent and stated that his benefit would be $104,000. Employer paid premiums based on that amount. Decedent was not shown to have read the master policy. The certificate was issued pursuant to a statute requiring it. Decedent's salary upon his death was $14,700, and based on the policy formula, the correct benefit was $44,000. Insurer sent employer a corrected certificate showing the proper benefit 19 days before decedent died, but the certificate was not given to decedent or his wife until after his death, and neither was informed of the error and correction before death occurred. The master policy stated that the policy controlled in event of discrepancy between it and the certificate. On appeal from judgment that wife was entitled to a $104,000 benefit, the Supreme Court ruled that: (1) the certificate was part of the contract, and in view of the conflict the construction most favorable to the insured would be adopted and the policy provision that the policy governed would be disregarded; (2) insured contracted only indirectly, through his employer, with insurer and his certificate of insurance was his primary source of information regarding the policy and thus he was entitled to rely on the certificate to correctly state the coverage; (3) if the coverage stated on the certificate is incorrect, insured and beneficiaries are deprived of the chance to supplement coverage if they find it inadequate; (4) the amount of decedent's coverage was the essence of the policy; (5) insurer was the drafter of the policy and certificate and must bear the burden of the ambiguity it created; and (6) equity did not require reformation of the contract to correct the error as the certificate was a year old and due diligence would have resulted in discovery of the error before death. Martin v. Crown Life Ins. Co., 202 M 461, 658 P2d 1099, 40 St. Rep. 216 (1983).

"Good Health" Clause — Coverage Not Precluded: "Good health" clause in application for life policy did not preclude recovery where insured suffered undiagnosed terminal cancer at the time of application and thus was unaware of illness. Friez v. Nat'l Old Line Ins. Co., 703 F2d 1093 (9th Cir. 1983).

Partnership — Coverage of Individual Partners' Automobiles: When policy extended liability coverage to any automobile owned by the named insured, which was the partnership, without any limitation as to vehicles listed on the policy and when endorsement extending coverage to the individual partners provided that coverage for them would be the same as for the partnership, the policy provided coverage to the automobile owned by one of the partners but not listed on the policy. USF&G v. Newman, 656 F2d 457 (9th Cir. 1981).

Construction of Exclusionary Clause: Applying the principal that an insurance policy is to be interpreted as a whole in the entirety of its terms and conditions and, if ambiguous, the construction most favorable to the insured is to be adopted, the Supreme Court held that enlargement of the exclusionary clause to encompass an alleged agent of the insured regarding the use, possession, and physical control of property is unwarranted and lacks merit. Lindell v. Ruthford, 183 M 135, 598 P2d 616 (1979).

Responsibility for Coverage: When two insurers have each obligated themselves to provide primary coverage, the coverage should be prorated between them in accordance with the limits of liability applicable in each policy. Truck Ins. Exch. v. Transport Indem. Co., 180 M 419, 591 P2d 188 (1979).

Right of Subrogation: There is no right of subrogation in favor of an insurance company against its own insured. This is true both as to the named insured and any party to whom coverage is extended under the terms of the policy. Truck Ins. Exch. v. Transport Indem. Co., 180 M 419, 591 P2d 188 (1979).

Oral Contract for Insurance: Since there was no evidence that an automobile insurance agent and his prospective client were dealing for temporary insurance, the case must be judged, not as a possible oral binder, but as one involving a regular insurance policy. Assuming, without deciding, that there may be an oral insurance policy in Montana, it is required by case law that an oral contract must contain the essential elements of a contract. There was no meeting of minds in this case. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Lee, 35 St. Rep. 1508 (D.C. Mont. 1978) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Ambiguous Insurance Policy: Summary judgment on a claim for loss by theft of a commercial carpet cleaner was improperly granted defendant insurer when the policy of insurance was ambiguous as to exclusions from coverage. The particular exclusionary clause was subordinate to the general intent of the contract. Alpha Real Estate Dev., Inc. v. Aetna Life & Cas. Co., 174 M 301, 570 P2d 585 (1977).

Crop Damage — "Valued" or "Open" Policies: Where the basis for recovery under a crop-hail insurance policy was on the acreage insured, stipulation that amount payable should not exceed the "actual loss or damage", read in light of the entire policy, pertained to loss or damage representing the percentage of injury to the crop and not the value of the crop. Billmayer v. Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 146 M 38, 404 P2d 322, 20 ALR 3d 916 (1965).

Crop-Hail Insurance — Strict Construction: Crop-hail insurance policy, which required information pertaining to acreage of crop prior to issuance, should be strictly construed against the insurer in determining that value of crop damage was based on percentage of area destroyed rather than on estimated crop value, since policy form was provided by the company. Billmayer v. Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 146 M 38, 404 P2d 322, 20 ALR 3d 916 (1965).

Construction of Endorsement Relating to Persons Covered: Endorsement on insurance policy limiting aircraft insurance to named person and anyone else having certain number of hours of flying time and proper certification was construed against the insurer to mean that the named insured was at all times covered while others who flew the craft had to be certified also in order to be covered by the policy. Ins. Co. of N. Am. v. Butte Aero Sales & Serv., 243 F. Supp. 276 (D.C. Mont. 1965), distinguished in Bequette v. Nat'l Ins. Underwriters, Inc., 429 F2d 896 (1970).

Delinquent Premium Payment — Strikes to Essence of Contract: Contracts of insurance, like other contracts, must be construed according to the terms which the parties have used, to be taken and understood, in the absence of ambiguity, in their plain, ordinary, and popular sense; the condition in a policy of life insurance that the policy shall cease if the stipulated premium shall not be paid on or before the day fixed is of the very essence and substance of the contract, against which even a court of equity cannot grant relief. Conlon v. N. Life Ins. Co., 108 M 473, 92 P2d 284 (1939).

Agent's Knowledge of Defect: The agent of an insurance company at the time he wrote a policy insuring the owner of a city building against public liability for injuries suffered therein provided the building was in the care of but a single tenant knew that the premises were occupied by several tenants. The agent's knowledge was imputable to the insurer, his principal; therefore, in the absence of misrepresentations and concealment on the part of the insured, the breach of the single tenancy clause did not void the policy. Curtis v. Zurich Gen. Accident & Liab. Ins. Co., Ltd., 108 M 275, 89 P2d 1038 (1939).

Willful Act Exclusion Not in Policy: Where a fire insurance company did not except liability for loss incurred through the burning of the insured property by the insured himself while insane, as it could have done, it could not, in reliance on section 40-604, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), declaring that the insurer is not liable for a loss caused by the willful act of the insured, assert that it was entitled to an equitable setoff. Hier v. Farmers Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 104 M 471, 67 P2d 831 (1937).

Construction Against Insurer: A policy of insurance must be liberally construed in favor of the insured and strictly construed against the insurer. Ins. Co. of N. Am. v. Butte Aero Sales & Serv., 243 F. Supp. 276 (D.C. Mont. 1965); Wills v. Midland Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 108 M 536, 91 P2d 695 (1939); DeVore v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 103 M 599, 64 P2d 1071 (1937).

Application for Insurance Not Part of Contract: The application for a fire insurance policy may not be considered as a part of the contract unless incorporated therein by reference or otherwise. Schroeder v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 103 M 547, 63 P2d 1016 (1936).

COVERAGE OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES

Contract Language Not Preventing Payment of Punitive Damage Award — No Public Policy Against Payment: Following the award of general, special, and punitive damages to the plaintiff for injuries suffered in a car accident, the insurance company refused to pay the punitive damages, whereupon the plaintiff sued the insurance company. On appeal from a summary judgment for the plaintiff, the Supreme Court held that the language in the insurance policy relied on by the company to deny the payment of punitive damages was ambiguous and should be construed against the company to allow payment of those damages. The court also held, under the rationale of First Bank (N.A.) Billings v. Transamerica Ins. Co., 209 M 93, 679 P2d 1217, 41 St. Rep. 573 (1984), that there was no public policy against the payment of punitive damages by an insurance company. Fitzgerald v. W. Fire Ins. Co., 209 M 213, 679 P2d 790, 41 St. Rep. 654 (1984).

Insurance Coverage of Punitive Damages — Not Violative of Public Policy: Punitive damages may be insured against in Montana, and insurance coverage of such damages does not violate public policy. First Bank (N.A.) of Billings v. Transamerica Ins. Co., 209 M 93, 679 P2d 1217, 41 St. Rep. 573 (1984).

Punitive Damages for Intentional Act — Auto Insurance: Where the owner of a car, arriving on the scene of an accident involving his car driven by another with his permission, intentionally tampered with physical evidence at the scene and was thereafter found liable for punitive damages by a state court, but neither he nor the driver were liable for actual damages, under the policy in question the insurance company was not liable for either the punitive damages or attorney's fees. Lee v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 39 St. Rep. 1761 (D.C. Mont. 1982) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Case Notes

Reformation of Insurance Policy Not Permitted — Clear and Explicit Language Used — Lack of Due Diligence in Discovering Error Not Justifying Reformation: An insurer attempted to reform an insurance policy on the ground that the policy should not cover property near a structure that was specifically exempted from the policy. However, the policy specifically included property within 1,000 feet of other insured property, including property around the exempted structure. The District Court applied 33-15-302 and determined that it was prohibited from reforming insurance policies. On appeal, the Supreme Court also declined to reform the contract, as the language was clear and explicit, due diligence would have uncovered the error, and the insurer failed to establish that its insurance policy expressed something other than what the parties mutually intended. Lincoln County Port Authority v. Allianz Global Risks US Ins. Co., 2013 MT 365, 373 Mont. 60, 315 P.3d 934.

Assurance of Coverage Made by Agent — Coverage Not Extended Beyond Policy Terms: Defendant insurer claimed that plaintiffs' claims in a 2002 action were barred by collateral estoppel and res judicata because of the prior holding in Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001). Applying the test in Haines Pipeline Constr., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 265 M 282, 876 P2d 632 (1994), for determining whether collateral estoppel barred the present action because it might be a relitigation of the 2001 case, the Supreme Court disagreed with defendant's assertion. Plaintiffs had not previously litigated whether defendant had a duty to defend and a duty to indemnify Hoss because that issue did not arise until defendant refused to indemnify Hoss and Hoss confessed judgment. Also, the issue of whether defendant had a duty to defend and a duty to indemnify Hoss was different from the issue in the 2001 case, which concerned whether Lee was a named insured under Hoss's policy, thereby entitling Lee to underinsured motorist benefits. Because the present issue was never litigated, there was never a final judgment on the merits, so defendant's collateral estoppel and res judicata arguments were inapplicable. Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 54, 320 M 174, 86 P3d 562 (2004).

Lee was injured in an accident in Louisiana while in a taxi and filed an underinsured motorist (UIM) claim pursuant to coverage provided by USAA Casualty Insurance Co. (USAA) on two vehicles that she jointly owned, with Hoss contending that she was entitled to stack coverage under the policies. Although USAA initially indicated that Lee would be entitled to UIM coverage because she was a co-owner of the vehicles, the insurer later changed its position and denied coverage on grounds that because Lee was not a named insured and as a matter of law not a "covered person" under the relevant policy provisions, USAA had no obligation to treat her as such. The District Court granted summary judgment for USAA, concluding that Lee was not an insured for purposes of UIM coverage under the express language of Hoss's policy and that Lee could not benefit from a policy to which she was not a party. On appeal, Lee contended that she was entitled to a new trial because USAA's claim adjuster initially indicated that Lee would be covered, USAA should be bound by that admission of coverage, and USAA's first answer should be a binding judicial admission as a matter of law. The Supreme Court relied on DeJonge v. Mut. of Enumclaw, 843 P2d 914 (Oreg. 1992), and Shows v. Pemberton, 868 P2d 164 (Wash. Ct. App. 1994), in holding that an assurance made by an insurance agent that a particular coverage exists, in the absence of an ambiguity, does not create or extend coverage beyond the covered risks expressly identified or excluded in the policy. Assurances or representations made as a result of confusion and misfeasance by an insurance agent do not render an otherwise unambiguous policy ambiguous as a matter of law. As a general rule, the agent's conduct may be offered to demonstrate that an ambiguity exists, particularly from the perspective of a reasonable insurance consumer. Nevertheless, in some limited instances, an assurance of coverage by an agent that conflicts with an unambiguous policy may afford an insured relief under the theories of waiver or equitable estoppel. Lee pursued the theory of estoppel in this case, but failed to prove that she relied on the agent's representation of coverage to her detriment. A judicial admission is not binding unless it is an unequivocal statement of fact, rather than a conclusion of law or the expression of an opinion. USAA admitted no material fact of consequence to the case. Thus, neither the agent's representations that coverage existed nor the first answer admitting that Lee was covered served as sufficient grounds for enforcing the policy in her favor or for estopping USAA from denying coverage. Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001), distinguishing Dion v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 22 Mont. Fed. Rep. 225 (D.C. Mont. 1997), and Boyle v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 25 Mont. Fed. Rep. 446 (D.C. Mont. 1999).

No Contract by Estoppel: Where a person claiming to be insured had received no premium notices, paid no premium, or received no policy for 3 months, the rule that insurance contracts cannot be created by estoppel was particularly applicable. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Lee, 35 St. Rep. 1508 (D.C. Mont. 1978) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Application for Insurance Not Part of Contract: The application for a fire insurance policy may not be considered as a part of the contract unless incorporated therein by reference or otherwise. Schroeder v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 103 M 547, 63 P2d 1016 (1936).

Case Notes

Construction of Policy — Contract: Under section 40-402, R.C.M. 1947 (predecessor to this section, since repealed), a contract of fire insurance must be construed as any other contract; the policy must specify the matters enumerated and this information must be supplied to the insurance company by the applicant for the policy. Stevens v. Steck, 101 M 569, 55 P2d 7 (1936).

Contractual Elements Contained in Fire Insurance Policy: A fire insurance policy, specifying the parties between whom the contract was made, the rate of premium, the property insured, the risk insured against, and the period of time during which the insurance was to continue, contained all the elements of a policy of insurance required by the provisions of section 40-402, R.C.M. 1947 (predecessor to this section, since repealed). Baker v. Pa. Fire Ins. Co., 81 M 271, 263 P 93 (1928).

Provisions of Insurance Statutes to Be Read Into Policy — Arguably Nonconforming Suicide Payment Provision Not Voided: An insurance policy contained a suicide exclusion permitted by 33-20-121, but the payment provided to the beneficiary arguably did not comply with 33-20-121(2). The beneficiary contended that a proper application of this section to the policy resulted in invalidating the entirety of the suicide exclusion. The District Court determined that this section required that the Insurance Commissioner's reserve value provision of 33-20-121(2) be read into the policy. The plain meaning of this section is to give effect to insurance policies and provisions to the fullest extent possible by reading statutory provisions into the policy to achieve full compliance with the insurance code. Nothing in this section supports applying it to invalidate policy provisions. The suicide exclusion contemplated some payment to the beneficiary in an amount much reduced from the total benefit amount. The arguably nonconforming payment provision did not render any portion of the policy invalid. Instead, the 33-20-121(2) provision was included in the policy so as to bring the entirety of the exclusion and the policy itself into compliance with the code. In light of the fact that the amount tendered to the beneficiary exceeded the amount required by utilizing the methodology contained in 33-20-121(2), the District Court did not err in concluding that the subsection must be read into the policy to effectuate the provisions clearly contemplated by the parties. Exhaustion of Other Coverage Requirement Before Benefits Triggered — No Violation of Public Policy on Subrogation: A driver was in an accident while driving a business vehicle insured by the business through an insurer, and the driver incurred medical and other expenses. The driver sought recovery of medical payment benefits and underinsured motorist benefits through another insurer, her personal insurance company, Safeco. The driver argued that Safeco's policy unlawfully subrogated her claims because it required medical payment coverage and underinsured motorist coverage to be exhausted under any other applicable policy before triggering Safeco's concurrent duty to pay benefits. The Supreme Court held that this case was not a de facto subrogation case because Safeco had not attempted subrogation and had not rejected the driver's insurance claims. Safeco's policy merely stated that it was only a secondary insurer and that excess benefits would be available only after the first insurer had paid full benefits. Scheafer v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2014 MT 73, 374 Mont. 278, 320 P.3d 967.

Port Authority Insured Under County Insurance Policy — Extrinsic Evidence Considered — Policy Construed Against Drafter — Insurer Not Immune From Suit as Reinsurer: After a port authority building was destroyed by a fire, the port claimed that it qualified as an insured under a county insurance company policy that included county members and any other county entities that receive insurance through a county joint insurance authority. The insurance company claimed that the language in the policy did not extend to county entities such as the port. Additionally, the insurance company claimed that it was a reinsurer and therefore it was improper for the port to bring a direct claim against it. The Supreme Court held that the port qualified as an insured under terms of the policy and that a direct claim was proper. In reaching a conclusion that was contrary to the language of the policy, the court gave meaning to the entire contract, considered extrinsic evidence, and construed ambiguous language in the policy against the insurer as the drafter. In determining that a direct claim was proper, the court reasoned that the port dealt directly with the insurance company, and therefore the insurer was an excess insurance carrier, rather than a reinsurer. Lincoln County Port Authority v. Allianz Global Risks US Ins. Co., 2013 MT 365, 373 Mont. 60, 315 P.3d 934.

"Each Person" Limit Covers Direct and Derivative Damages for Loss of Father — District Court Reversed and Remanded: Heath and Vail and their 3-month-old daughter were injured in an automobile accident. Heath died of his injuries and his father (Frank) sued to recover damages on behalf of Heath's estate and his granddaughter who suffered bodily injury in the accident. The defendant insurer paid Heath's estate $50,000 under the policy's "each accident" limit. The insurer also paid Heath's estate the "each person" policy limit of $50,000 and paid the medical expenses of the daughter. Frank sought additional wrongful death and survivorship benefits for the daughter to be paid out of the policy's $50,000 "each person" limit. The insurer refused and the District Court awarded partial summary judgment to the insurer. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded. The language of the policy defining bodily injury applied to those persons who did not sustain bodily injury. The daughter sustained bodily injury; thus, the policy was interpreted to mean that the "each accident" limit of $100,000 was available and the "each person" limitation of $50,000 applied separately to Heath's claim and to the daughter's claim. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Freyer, 2010 MT 191, 357 Mont. 329, 239 P.3d 143, following Mitchell v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 2003 MT 102, 315 Mont. 281, 68 P.3d 703, and distinguishing Allstate v. Additional Insured Endorsement in Primary Policy — Duty to Defend: An employee of a subcontractor was injured while installing fireproofing in a building. The general contractor's liability insurer (defendant insurer) tendered a defense to the subcontractor under the indemnity clause in the subcontract and to the general contractor's insurer (plaintiff insurer) under the commercial general liability policy, so the question arose whether plaintiff insurer had a duty to defend pursuant to the commercial liability under which the general contractor qualified as an additional insured. Plaintiff insurer argued that because the general contractor could not shift responsibility to the subcontractor for the general contractor's statutory duty to maintain general job site safety, plaintiff insurer had no duty to defend or cover the loss. The District Court disagreed and granted summary judgment to defendant insurer pursuant to the additional insured endorsement. Plaintiff insurer appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The court examined the indemnity provision in the subcontract and determined that the indemnity provision was not sufficiently clear and unequivocal in its intent to indemnify the general contractor for its own negligence, so the court then turned to the language of the additional insured endorsement. The general contractor was clearly named as an additional insured on a primary noncontributing basis, so plaintiff insurer's policy was clearly intended to be primary. Because plaintiff insurer had a duty to defend the general contractor, the District Court did not err in granting defendant insurer's motion for summary judgment and holding that plaintiff insurer breached its duty to defend. No Coverage for Personal Property in Insured Company's Care for Damage by Company Employees: Plaintiff company serviced oil wells, and during the removal and reinstallation of the rods and tubing of a well, company employees dropped a piece of new tubing, causing about $30,000 of damage to the tubing and the tubing anchor. The tubing did not belong to plaintiff, but was provided by a separate company and was onsite when the work began. Plaintiff filed an insurance claim with defendant insurer, but the claim was denied on grounds that the tubing was in plaintiff's care, custody, and control and that such an occurrence was not covered by plaintiff's commercial general liability policy, which excluded coverage for property damage to personal property in plaintiff's care, custody, and control. The District Court agreed and granted summary judgment for the insurer. Plaintiff appealed on grounds that a separate policy provision canceled out the exclusion by providing that plaintiff's employees were not considered insureds for purposes of property damage to property in plaintiff's care, custody, and control, and because the damage was caused by the employees, the exclusion did not apply. Interpreting the policy as a whole, the Supreme Court affirmed. Because plaintiff was a corporation, it could act only through its employees, who were acting within the scope of their employment, so the property was also in plaintiff's care, custody, and control and was therefore excluded from coverage. Lambert Well Serv., Inc. v. Wellington Specialty Ins. Co., 2008 MT 212, 344 M 204, 186 P3d 1255 (2008).

Insurance Subrogation Prior to Insured Being Made Whole — Requirements for Class Action Certification Met: Ferguson sought class action certification of a case involving an insurer that subrogated against the tortfeasor's insurance carrier before Ferguson was made whole. The District Court denied certification on grounds that under Swanson v. Hartford Ins. Co. of the Midwest, 2002 MT 81, 309 M 269, 46 P3d 584 (2002), the legal duty for insurers taking subrogation eliminated the common issue and on grounds that because Ferguson's case required fact-specific determinations of "made whole" entitlements, class action was not appropriate. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. As in Sieglock v. Burlington N. Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2003 MT 355, 319 M 8, 81 P3d 495 (2003), the District Court failed to consider whether the plaintiff class presented common issues of fact, particularly the common issues of fact arising from the insurer's subrogation program. The existence of the well-established duty on the part of the insurer to make the insured whole prior to subrogation, as set out in Swanson, did not eliminate the common fact issue of whether the insurer programmatically breached that duty, and when a common scheme of deceptive conduct is alleged, common questions of law or fact will exist (see Powers v. Gov't Employees Ins. Co., 192 FRD 313 (S.D. Fla. 1998)). Thus, Ferguson satisfied the commonality issue. The District Court further erred in reasoning that Ferguson failed to demonstrate that any common issues predominate over questions affecting only individual members of the affected class. Ferguson's challenge was not to an error in the insurer's application of the "made whole" rule to any given insured, but rather to the procedures of a program of subrogation that systematically deprived all class members of any consideration of their "made whole" rights, so predominance was not required for class certification in this case. Lastly, the efficient remedy of classwide declaratory relief was appropriate because the size of the average claim was so small that relief for the average class member was not economically available outside of class litigation. The case was remanded for further proceedings as a class action. Ferguson v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 2008 MT 109, 342 M 380, 180 P3d 1164 (2008).

Insurance Policy Ambiguous Regarding Coverage of Property of Policyholder's Lessee Construed in Favor of Providing Coverage: Kenney leased some space in a commercial building to Lammers. A fire in the building destroyed much of Lammers' property. Kenney had an insurance policy for the building covering personal property in rooms provided by Kenney as a landlord. As a lessee, Lammers sought coverage under the policy, but the insurer did not deny coverage and did not pay any part of Lammers' loss, so Lammers filed a complaint seeking damages from the insurer and several other defendants. The District Court found that the policy was not clear whether only Kenney's property was covered or whether the property of lessees was also covered and granted summary judgment for the insurer. Lammers appealed. The Supreme Court held that the policy was ambiguous and should therefore be construed against the insurer and in favor of providing coverage. Summary judgment was improper, and the case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Lammers v. Moun, 2008 MT 47, 341 M 406, 177 P3d 1026 (2008).

No Right to Subrogation From Insurance Loss Payee — Summary Judgment Proper: The Montana Petroleum Tank Release Compensation Board reimbursed a gas station owner $254,842 for expenses incurred in an environmental remediation, and the Board then sought to exercise

subrogation rights against the owner's insurer and a lessee for reimbursement. The District Court granted summary judgment to the insurer after finding that the Board had no right of subrogation through the gas station owner, and the Board appealed. The Supreme Court noted that the gas station owner was at most a loss payee under its insurance policy, so the Board had no right of subrogation through the owner or through the corporation established to run the gas station, which had no part in funding the remediation or obligation to pay for any part of the remediation. The Board could not show that the owner's insurer was unjustly enriched by failing to pay a claim that the insurer did not owe, so subrogation did not apply. Thus, the Board had no right to subrogation through either the owner or the lessee to recover damages from the owner's insurer, and summary judgment was proper. Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. Capitol Indem. Co., 2006 MT 133, 332 M 352, 137 P3d 522 (2006), distinguishing Swingley v. Riechoff, 112 M 59, 112 P2d 1075 (1941).

Insurance Coverage for Intentional Dumping of Hazardous Waste Denied Under Policy Exclusion: For more than 3 years, defendant disposed of hazardous waste solvents into a sanitary landfill. The solvents migrated into the ground water, and neighbors sued defendant for personal injury and property damages. Defendant sought coverage from plaintiff insurer to remediate the damages and costs for the third-party suits, and the insurer eventually sought a declaration that it owed no duty to provide insurance coverage and defense costs for the environmental claims. Defendant's insurance policy contained a pollution exclusion that barred coverage for environmental damage unless the pollution was sudden or accidental. The District Court granted plaintiff summary judgment, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court applied general rules of contract law, strictly construing the policy provisions in favor of defendant, but affirmed summary judgment absent ambiguity in the policy language. Under the policy, the initial disposal, rather than the migration and any resulting damages, had to be sudden and accidental in order to fall within the pollution exclusion clause. Defendant's routine intentional disposal of waste over a period of years could not be considered sudden or accidental, so defendant was unable to establish that the claims fell within the basic scope of coverage. Thus, plaintiff had no duty to defend defendant, and summary judgment for plaintiff was proper. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Ribi Immunochem Research, Inc., 2005 MT 50, 326 M 174, 108 P3d 469 (2005). See also Bozeman v. AIU Ins. Co., 272 M 349, 900 P2d 929 (1995), and Makarka v. Great Am. Ins. Co, 14 P3d 964 (Alaska 2000).

Wendell Test Applied to Determination of Whether Bodily Injury Caused by Accident "Resulting From the Use" of Insured Vehicle: Defendant's son was injured in a hunting accident after riding to the hunt in a vehicle owned by Wajahuski and insured by plaintiff. The insurance policy provided for coverage resulting from the use of a vehicle. The District Court applied the test in Wendell v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 1999 MT 17, 293 M 140, 974 P2d 623 (1999), and held that the automobile insurance policy did not provide liability coverage with respect to defendant's claims for bodily injury. Defendant appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Even though the Wendell test was originally applied in an uninsured motorist case, the expansive, fact-intensive test also applied here. The phrase "resulting from the use" was ambiguous, so the contract terms were construed in a light most favorable to the insured or other beneficiary. The accident could have occurred in any location, regardless of how the hunters reached their destination. The fact that that particular vehicle was used to transport the hunters and assist in the hunt provided no connection between the use of the vehicle and the hunting accident. Thus, the District Court did not err in holding that the personal injuries were not caused by an accident resulting from the use of the insured motor vehicle. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Ferrin, 2002 MT 196, 311 M 155, 54 P3d 21 (2002).

Two Rules of Subrogation — Colorado Subrogation Choice of Law Provision Violative of Montana Public Policy: The Swansons were part-time residents of Montana and Colorado. They paid their automobile insurance premiums through Hartford Insurance Company (Hartford) in Colorado, but were involved in an accident in Montana with a truck owned by USF/Reddaway, incurring over $50,000 in medical expenses. Their policy included: (1) a Colorado statutorily required type of no-fault insurance called personal injury protection, or PIP, under which Hartford was required to pay certain losses and expenses, including medical expenses, lost wages, and rehabilitation expenses; (2) a subrogation clause granting Hartford the right to recover any payments made under PIP in the event that the Swansons recovered damages from the party responsible for the bodily injury; and (3) a choice of law provision providing that any dispute concerning the denial or delay of PIP benefits or subrogation rights would be governed by Colorado law. Hartford paid some claims but denied others, and later learned that USF/Reddaway's insurer intended to pay the Swansons, so Hartford decided to pursue subrogation to recover money that it had paid. The Swansons settled with USF/Reddaway's insurer, but USF/Reddaway's limits of liability exceeded the amount of the settlement. The Swansons eventually sued Hartford for breach of contract and unfair claim settlement. Hartford had the case removed to Montana federal District Court, which certified three questions to the Montana Supreme Court. The Supreme Court cited Skauge v. Mtn. St. Tel. & Tel., 172 M 521, 565 P2d 628 (1977), for the doctrine that an insured must be made whole before an insurer may assert its subrogation rights, which means that not only must the insured recover all losses, but costs of recovery as well, including attorney fees and litigation costs. The 1997 amendments to 33-23-203 allowed for reasonable subrogation, but did not include a specific "made whole" requirement. Nevertheless, common law and the statute jointly establish two rules of subrogation. First, an insured should not receive duplicate payments for the same element of loss, and second, the insurer may not assert subrogation rights until the insured has been fully compensated for damages, regardless of any contract language to the contrary. The Colorado provision providing a choice of law would allow subrogation before the insured is made whole, and is therefore a violation of Montana public policy. Swanson v. Hartford Ins. Co. of the Midwest, 2002 MT 81, 309 M 269, 46 P3d 584 (2002), following Youngblood v. Am. St. Ins. Co., 262 M 391, 866 P2d 203 (1993). See also DeTienne Associates Ltd. Partnership v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 266 M 184, 879 P2d 704 (1994).

Plain Language of Policies Providing Insurance on Rental Car Construed — Primary Versus Excess Coverage: Hudson used a credit card to rent a 1995 Ford Mustang convertible from P.C. Rental, Inc. (P.C.). Three days later, Hudson lost control of the car, resulting in damages rendering the vehicle a total loss. At the time of the accident, P.C. had a commercial lines policy through Empire Fire and Marine Insurance Company (Empire) that included liability and physical damage coverage. Hudson did not own a vehicle and was not covered under a personal policy, but auto rental insurance was provided by the company whose credit card Hudson used for the rental. Empire paid P.C. the agreed actual cash value of the vehicle, minus a $1,000 policy deductible, then sold the damaged vehicle for salvage and received an additional $1,108. The credit card company, Visa U.S.A. (Visa), also paid P.C. about $7,800 to cover P.C.'s deductible and lost rental fees. P.C. then brought a breach of contract action against Hudson for failing to return the vehicle in the same condition in which it was rented, as required by the rental agreement. Hudson alleged that Chase Manhattan Bank (Chase), as issuer of the credit card, was responsible for damages sustained to the rental car under the terms of the rental insurance. Hudson subsequently filed for bankruptcy and assigned all rights in the third-party action against Chase to P.C. P.C. then amended the complaint to include the credit card company as defendant, alleging that the rental insurance provided coverage on a 24-hour basis for damage to a car rented with the credit card up to the full value of the car. Visa denied P.C.'s allegations regarding the rental insurance, alleged that Visa had met its obligations under the policy by covering P.C.'s deductible and lost rental fees, and moved for summary judgment, which was granted. The District Court concluded that Hudson was an insured under the liability policy provided to P.C. by Empire and thus Empire was not entitled to subrogate against its own insured. The court determined that because both policies provided damage coverage for the same vehicle, it was necessary to look to the "other insurance" clauses of the policies. The Empire policy stated that its coverage was primary, while the Visa policy stated that its coverage was excess coverage, so Empire was not entitled to recover any of the amount that it paid to P.C. from Visa. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Given the nature of the coverage available, no determination of whether Hudson was an insured under Empire's physical damage coverage was necessary or possible under the policies. The District Court did not err when it concluded that, based on the clear language of the policies, P.C.'s physical damage coverage was primary and Visa's rental insurance was excess. P.C. Rental, Inc. v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 2000 MT 106, 299 M 315, 998 P2d 1168, 57 St. Rep. 430 (2000).

"Arising Out of" Ambiguous — Coverage for Liability Not Excluded: Pablos were injured in a vehicle accident involving Moore, who was transporting a landscaping tractor for his employer. The employer was covered by a commercial general liability insurance policy that provided liability insurance for negligent acts of the corporation and its employees. Pablos contended that the employer was negligent in the hiring, training, and supervision of Moore. The employer conceded that the claim arose during the policy period and fell within the definitions of "bodily injury" and "occurrence" and that the policy would provide coverage unless coverage was denied by an exclusion but contended that coverage was excluded under both the exclusion for damages "arising out of" the use of an automobile and the exclusion for damages "arising out of" the transportation of mobile equipment. The District Court held that the term "arising out of" was ambiguous and, construing the instrument against the drafter-insurer, ruled that coverage for Pablos' accident was not excluded under the policy language. Noting that the phrase "arising out of" has been declared ambiguous in another insurance context in Wendell v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 1999 MT 17, 293 M 140, 974 P2d 623 (1999), the Supreme Court applied a similar rationale to the phrase in both exclusionary clauses at issue in the present case. The phrase was reasonably subject to more than one interpretation and thus ambiguous. Pursuant to Head v. Cent. Reserve Life of N. America Ins. Co., 256 M 188, 845 P2d 735, 50 St. Rep. 20 (1993), if the terms of an insurance policy are ambiguous, obscure, or open to different constructions, the construction most favorable to the insured or other beneficiary must prevail, particularly if an ambiguous provision attempts to exclude the liability of the insurer. Here, the policy did not clearly and unambiguously exclude coverage for the theories of liability pleaded by Pablos, and the District Court's summary judgment that coverage was owed on Pablos' claims for negligent hiring, training, and supervision of Moore was affirmed. Pablo v. Moore, 2000 MT 48, 298 M 393, 995 P2d 460, 57 St. Rep. 231 (2000), following Marquis v. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 961 P2d 1213 (Kans. 1998).

Insured Entitled to Recover Attorney Fees, Costs, and Interest, Including Prejudgment Interest, Before Insurer May Recover Pursuant to Subrogation Rights: Park Plaza Hotel suffered extensive property damage when a train wrecked in subzero weather, causing a power outage during which the hotel's pipes burst. The hotel's insurer paid the hotel the limits of its policy, and the hotel sued the railroad for damages in excess of the policy limits. The insurer joined in the suit. The hotel cross-claimed against its insurer for attorney fees and costs expended in recovering its excess damages from the railroad. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court and held that the insured must recover all that it has lost, including attorney fees and costs expended in an attempt to recover sums over and above those received under its policy with the insurer, before the insurer may recover pursuant to its subrogation rights. The Supreme Court also held that the insurer was obligated to pay any prejudgment interest to which the lower court determined the insured was entitled. DeTienne Associates Ltd. Partnership v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 266 M 184, 879 P2d 704, 51 St. Rep. 730 (1994), following and clarifying Skauge v. Mtn. St. Tel. & Tel. Co., 172 M 521, 565 P2d 628 (1977).

Chocolate Inventory Destroyed — Contamination Exclusion Inapplicable: After discovering that a worker had been exposed to hepatitis, the owners of Helena's Parrot Confectionery (the Parrot) immediately alerted the city health department. When the state Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) subsequently placed an embargo on all candy, the Parrot, without testing for contamination, voluntarily destroyed its existing inventory and submitted a claim for the loss to its insurance company. Citing the high probability of contamination and the contamination exclusion in the insurance contract, the District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the insurance company. Adopting the contamination definitions in Am. Cas. Co. of Reading, Pa. v. Myrick, 304 F2d 179 (5th Cir. 1962), Hi-G, Inc. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 391 F2d 924 (1st Cir. 1968), and Auten v. Employers Nat'l Ins. Co., 722 SW 2d 468 (Tex. App. 1987), the Supreme Court reversed, holding that absent proof of "actual" contamination, the contamination exclusion does not bar coverage for the Parrot's losses. Duensing v. Traveler's Co., 257 M 376, 849 P2d 203, 50 St. Rep. 316 (1993).

No Subrogation Against Family Members: The Bottomly family owned a recreational cabin. On the mother's death, she left the cabin to two of her sons, Richard and James, with the understanding that all family members were entitled to use the cabin. Richard purchased insurance for the dwelling. While a third brother, Gene, was using the cabin, it burned down. The insurer paid Richard for the damage and sought to recover the amount paid from Gene. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court adopted the view that it was reasonable for the insured to believe that his policy covered the other family members and that therefore the other members qualified as insureds under the policy for subrogation purposes. Cont. Ins. Co. v. Bottomly, 250 M 66, 817 P2d 1162, 48 St. Rep. 861 (1991).

Commission Notes

In establishing minimum standards, it is recognized that certain terminology used in policies is difficult or impossible to restate in simplified language. This is because there are no suitable alternatives to necessary medical terminology, other insurance words of art, and statutory or regulatory language requirements. It is not the intention of this Act to preclude the use of such terminology or to penalize insurance companies for its continued use.

The purpose of this Act is to improve policy language in order to facilitate the insured's understanding of the coverages provided. The purpose is similar to that of the Outline of Coverage requirements found in Section V of the NAIC Model Individual Accident and Sickness Insurance Minimum Standards Act [not adopted in Montana] and in similar acts adopted in some jurisdictions. Consequently, any state adopting this Act may desire to review the continued necessity of other requirements such as the Outline of Coverage.

This Act is intended to apply to the certificates, policies or contracts of fraternal benefit societies, nonprofit health, hospital, and medical service corporations, prepaid health plans, dental care plans, vision care plans, pharmaceutical plans, health maintenance organizations, and all similar type organizations. In order to include such organizations, each state should properly identify them in accordance with that state's statutory terminology or by specific statutory citation.

Depending upon state law, insurance department jurisdiction, and other factors, separate legislation may be required. In any event, such proposed legislation should provide that the particular terminology used by these plans and organizations (e.g., contracts; certificates; subscribers; member) may be substituted for, or added to, the corresponding terms used in this Act.

Misrepresentations Decided Under Repealed "Warranty" Theory 339

CONSTRUCTION OF CURRENT SECTION

Admission of Medical Records to Determine Whether Material Misrepresentation Made on Application — No Prejudice: When applying for credit life insurance, plaintiff's husband, Clarence, indicated that he was in good health. Less than 1 year later, Clarence died, and plaintiff submitted an insurance claim, but the claim was denied and the policy was rescinded, so plaintiff sued. At trial, the District Court admitted Clarence's medical records. Plaintiff argued that the records were allowed without foundation showing that the records existed when Clarence applied for the insurance or that the records were relied on by the parties. The court concluded that it was for the jury to decide whether Clarence made a material misrepresentation that would justify defendant's action in denying the claim and rescinding the policy. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the District Court did not act arbitrarily or exceed the bounds of reason in admitting the records for jury inspection and that plaintiff failed to identify any prejudicial information in the records or show how introduction of the records harmed the case. Williams v. Union Fidelity Life Ins. Co., 2005 MT 273, 329 M 158, 123 P3d 213 (2005). See also Lopez v. Josephson, 2001 MT 133, 305 M 446, 30 P3d 326 (2001).

Evidence Related to Plaintiff's Bankruptcy Properly Precluded From Trial Regarding Plaintiff's Purchase of Credit Life Insurance: When Clarence and Barbara purchased a vehicle, the dealer offered credit life insurance as part of the transaction. Clarence died within 1 year of the purchase, but the insurer denied a life insurance claim and rescinded the policy. Barbara sued the insurer for fraud and bad faith. At trial, defendant sought to introduce evidence regarding plaintiff's bankruptcy, but the trial court granted Barbara's motion in limine excluding the bankruptcy evidence, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court found no evidence that the trial court acted arbitrarily or exceeded the bounds of reason in granting the motion in limine, and the trial court was affirmed. Williams v. Union Fidelity Life Ins. Co., 2005 MT 273, 329 M 158, 123 P3d 213 (2005). See also Lopez v. Josephson, 2001 MT 133, 305 M 446, 30 P3d 326 (2001).

Inapplicability of Filed Rate Doctrine to Claim of Violation of State Law Regarding Credit Life Insurance: Plaintiff asserted that defendant's credit life insurance application was ambiguous, entitling plaintiff to judgment as a matter of law when defendant rejected plaintiff's claim for benefits and rescinded plaintiff's certificate of insurance. Defendant claimed that any ruling that plaintiff was entitled to judgment as a matter of law based solely on the application form would violate the filed rate doctrine set out in Keogh v. Chicago & NW. Ry. Co., 260 US 156 (1922). The doctrine arose from a concern that deviation from a rate filed with a federal regulatory agency can result in imposition of civil or criminal sanctions by a court without sufficient knowledge or expertise in the ratesetting process of a regulatory agency, and the purpose of the doctrine is to ensure that rates are reasonable and evenly applied. The doctrine initially applied to common carriers but was later applied to insurance. The Montana Commissioner of Insurance asserted that the doctrine has not been extended to include insurance forms approved by a state agency and that the state's regulatory authority does not preclude a claim against an insurer for a violation of state law. The Supreme Court agreed. The filed rate doctrine did not apply in this case because there was no evidence that defendant's rates were set, reviewed, or filed by a federal regulatory agency, so defendant was not immunized under the doctrine for a violation of state law. Nevertheless, plaintiff was not entitled to summary judgment because a material question of fact remained as to whether plaintiff's husband misrepresented his health when filling out the application and, if so, whether the misrepresentation was material. Additionally, judgment as a matter of law was not appropriate because there was sufficient evidence to submit the issues to the jury. Williams v. Union Fidelity Life Ins. Co., 2005 MT 273, 329 M 158, 123 P3d 213 (2005).

Material Misrepresentation on Application for Credit Life and Disability Insurance — Denial of Coverage Warranted: Schlemmer applied to the North Central Life Insurance Company (North Central) for credit life and disability insurance but misrepresented his health history. If he had answered correctly on the application, he would have been ineligible for the insurance. Nevertheless, he averred by his signature that he understood the form and that his application statements were true, so the policy was issued. Schlemmer later filed a claim for disability payments. North Central investigated, found that Schlemmer had been treated within the previous 2 years for hypertension, chronic obstructive lung disease, and disease or disorder of the kidneys, contrary to his statements in the application, and denied the claim and refunded Schlemmer's premiums. Schlemmer sued for damages, claiming that the application and underwriting procedures used by North Central violated 33-18-201, commonly known as the unfair claims settlement practices law, breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and constituted fraud. Schlemmer also maintained that the District Court erred in failing to rule on whether North Central's agent had knowledge of Schlemmer's condition, which might have created a question of material fact. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's rulings that: (1) Schlemmer's claim of ignorance of the contents of the written application could not prevail because the application language was clear and unambiguous and Schlemmer did not deny signing it; (2) Schlemmer materially misrepresented his health on the application; (3) the material misrepresentation was legally sufficient to allow North Central to deny coverage under the policy; and (4) Schlemmer's argument that North Central's agent knew or should have known about Schlemmer's health was mere speculation insufficient to create an issue of fact to defeat North Central's properly supported motion for summary judgment. Further, the Supreme Court declined to consider Schlemmer's argument that the misrepresentation could not serve as a basis to rescind the policy because he did not apply for benefits until more than 2 years after applying for the insurance, pursuant to 33-22-205, because Schlemmer never raised the issue at the District Court level. Schlemmer v. N. Cent. Life Ins. Co., 2001 MT 256, 307 M 203, 37 P3d 63 (2001).

Rescission for False Information Not Breach: After purchasing a nursing home insurance policy for her husband, plaintiff filed a claim for benefits after his death that was denied. The policy was rescinded with premiums refunded. Alleging a breach of contract, plaintiff filed an action requesting punitive damages. The District Court granted summary judgment for the insurance company, ruling that in direct response to an insurance policy qualifying question about memory loss, plaintiff provided false information by not initially disclosing that her husband had been treated for organic brain deficit and failed to correct the error when the insurance company returned the application with the false information clause highlighted. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court decision, ruling that rescission of the insurance contract after discovering the false answer did not constitute breach of contract. Steinback v. Bankers Life & Cas. Co., 2000 MT 316, 302 M 483, 15 P3d 872, 57 St. Rep. 1336 (2000).

Policyholder's Failure to Disclose Alcoholism Not Material Misrepresentation: An applicant for an insurance policy answered "no" to a question on the insurance form as to whether he had visited a physician for any purpose during the previous 3 years. In fact, the applicant had been treated for alcoholism and depression. Subsequently, the insurance company alleged that the insured committed suicide and the insurance company refused to pay on the policy. The insured's death was later ruled not a suicide. The Supreme Court held that if alcoholism was a material concern of the insurance company, then it should have specifically requested information concerning alcohol use on the application form as it did with respect to other medical conditions, such as heart or kidney disease. Schneider v. Minn. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 247 M 334, 806 P2d 1032, 48 St. Rep. 224 (1991).

Estoppel by Misrepresentation: Estoppel has reference to the conduct of the person estopped. Estoppel has no application where the omissions of the party claiming estoppel brought about the problem. First Sec. Bank v. Goddard, 181 M 407, 593 P2d 1040 (1979), followed in McGregor v. Cushman/Mommer, 220 M 98, 714 P2d 536, 43 St. Rep. 206 (1986).

Unintentional Misrepresentation — Bona Fide Belief in Good Health: Deceased who had been continually reassured by his doctor that his health was improving and who was himself encouraged as to his condition did not misrepresent his health so as to preclude recovery on credit life policy by declaring "to the best of my knowledge and belief I am now in good health". Lentz v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am., 164 M 197, 520 P2d 769 (1974).

Misstatements Material to Acceptance — Driving Record: Where application for automobile insurance contained nonfraudulent misstatements as to driving history on one insured that were material to acceptance of risk and hazard assumed by plaintiff and insurer's agent received both letter from insurer rejecting application and notice of accident involving automobile to be insured on same day, insurer was not liable. Am. Indem. Co. v. Elespuru, 302 F. Supp. 878 (D.C. Mont. 1969).

Waiver of Misrepresentation — Subsequent Acceptance of Premiums: Motorist injured by negligence of insured was entitled to recover under insured's policy even though insurance company was entitled to rescind policy for violation of this statute since insurance policy was effective until rescinded and since subsequent to discovering insured's fraud, insurance company acted affirmatively in accepting premium payments and paying other claims arising out of same accident, all of which constituted implied waiver of right to rescind. McLane v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 150 M 116, 432 P2d 98 (1967).

MISREPRESENTATIONS DECIDED UNDER REPEALED "WARRANTY" THEORY

Actual Fraud — No Premium Refund: Where there was actual fraud on the part of the decedent in securing membership in a mutual benefit association by reason of false statements made by him in his application therefor, which prevented the membership from ever becoming effective, the association was not required to repay to the beneficiary a certificate fee of $5 and several monthly assessments of $1 each paid by decedent prior to his death, as it would have been in case of defaults other than those caused by fraud. McDonald v. N. Benefit Ass'n, 113 M 595, 131 P2d 479 (1942).

Actual Fraud — Voidable Policy: If the insured intentionally conceals facts which are material or makes false representations with reference to them, intending to mislead the insurer, he is guilty of actual fraud, which, at the option of the latter, avoids the policy. McDonald v. N. Benefit Ass'n, 113 M 595, 131 P2d 479 (1942), followed in Tyler v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 255 M 174, 841 P2d 538, 49 St. Rep. 958 (1992); Pelican v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 44 M 277, 119 P 778 (1911).

Fraud as Question of Fact: Actual fraud is always a question of fact for the jury, under 28-2-404, and unless the condition of the evidence is such that only one inference may be drawn from it, the court may not direct a verdict. McDonald v. N. Benefit Ass'n, 113 M 595, 131 P2d 479 (1942).

Agent's Knowledge of Misrepresentations: Where the agent of an insurance company, at the time he wrote a policy insuring the owner of a city building against public liability for injuries suffered therein provided the building was in the care of but a single tenant, knew that the premises were occupied by several tenants, his knowledge was imputable to the insurer, his principal, and in the absence of misrepresentations and concealment on the part of the insured, the breach of the single tenancy clause did not void the policy. Curtis v. Zurich Gen. Accident & Liab. Ins. Co., Ltd., 108 M 275, 89 P2d 1038 (1939).

Effect and Construction of Warranty: A "warranty" in a life insurance policy must be part and parcel of the contract, made so by express agreement of the parties upon the face thereof; and where a warranty is found to have been violated, it is unnecessary to determine the legal effect of an alleged fraudulent representation appearing in the application for the policy. Schroeder v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 103 M 547, 63 P2d 1016 (1936).

Evidence of Fraud — Death Certificate: Where attending physician recited in death certificate that he treated insured some 6 weeks before date of policy and cause of death was heart disease and acute bronchitis and beneficiary adopted the certificate in making proof of death, the certificate makes out a prima facie case of the truth of the statements and is sufficient evidence to establish breach of warranty. Schroeder v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 103 M 547, 63 P2d 1016 (1936).

Misrepresentation as to Interest: Since under section 40-308, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), a fire insurance policy had to specify the interest of the assured, it was material to the validity of the policy and concealment or misrepresentation of such fact rendered the policy void. Stevens v. Steck, 101 M 569, 55 P2d 7 (1936).

Statements as Express Warranties: By section 40-505, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), a statement in an insurance policy of a matter relating to the thing insured, or to the risk, as a fact, was made an express warranty, a breach of which in its inception prevented the policy from attaching to the risk. Weyh v. Calif. Ins. Co., 89 M 298, 296 P 1030 (1931).

Refund of Premiums Paid After Policy Voided: In an action to recover back life insurance premiums alleged to have been paid without consideration and under the mistaken idea that the policy was still in force, whereas it had been forfeited for noncompliance with its conditions, the test whether plaintiff can prevail is: could his beneficiary have collected the amount thereof had the insured died in the meantime? Osborne v. Supreme Lodge Ins. Dept., 69 M 361, 222 P 456 (1924).

Material Misrepresentations — Representations Provision in Policy: In his application for a life insurance policy which provided that the statements of the insured, in the absence of fraud, should be deemed representations and not warranties, the applicant represented that the only illness or disease he had had since childhood was a slight cold and that he had consulted or been treated by only one physician for 5 years last past. The evidence showed that 4 months before making these statements on his medical examination he had been treated by two physicians and was present at a consultation respecting his case held between the two and a third, that the treatment was not for a cold but for a serious ulcer of the throat of syphilitic or tubercular nature. Insured died of tubercular laryngitis some 4 months after issuance of the policy. The representations, accepted and acted upon as true by defendant to its prejudice, were as to material facts affecting the risk, intended to mislead and therefore fraudulent, justifying the insurer in avoiding the policy. Williams v. Mut. Life Ins. Co. of New York, 61 M 66, 201 P 320 (1921).

33-15-411. Binders for temporary insurance.

Case Notes

Binder Automatically Void Upon Issuance of Policy — Notice Requirement Inapplicable: Watts, a cantaloupe and grain farmer, applied for insurance to cover his cantaloupe crop by signing an insurance binder. However, when the policy was subsequently issued, coverage of the grain crop was provided, but the reference to coverage of the cantaloupe crop was crossed out. When Watts's claim for hail damage to the cantaloupe crop was denied, Watts sued, alleging breach of contract. The District Court's grant of summary judgment to the insurance company was affirmed. The Supreme Court held that the binder issued to cover Watts's cantaloupe crop was automatically voided upon issuance of the later policy and that expiration of the binder upon issuance of the policy was not a cancellation requiring 10 days' notification. Watts v. Westland Farm Mut. Ins. Co., 271 M 256, 895 P2d 626, 52 St. Rep. 430 (1995).

Oral Contract for Insurance: Since there was no evidence that an automobile insurance agent and his prospective client were dealing for temporary insurance, the case must be judged, not as a possible oral binder, but as one involving a regular insurance policy. Assuming, without deciding, that there may be an oral insurance policy in Montana, it is required by case law that an oral contract must contain the essential elements of a contract. There was no meeting of minds in this case. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Lee, 35 St. Rep. 1508 (D.C. Mont. 1978) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

33-15-412. Delivery of policy.

Case Notes

Issuance of Policy — Right to Recovery: Although this section requires an insurance carrier to issue a copy of its policy to those with an insurable interest, the plaintiffs did not show that the defendant insurer's failure to issue a copy to them materially affected their right to recovery. Dooling v. Perry, 183 M 451, 600 P2d 799 (1979).

Part 5
Claims and Benefits

Part Case Notes

Policy Definitions Conflicting With Incontestability Provision — Assertion of Forman Defense Violative of Montana Law: An insured brought an action against Deonier, an insurance agent, and Paul Revere Life Insurance Company (Revere) to recover benefits and damages after the insured's claim was denied on grounds of a preexisting condition, despite the incontestability clause in the policy. The agent cross-claimed against the company for indemnity and breach of fiduciary duty, contending that Revere planned to assert the Forman defense in Montana (see Mass. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Forman, 516 F2d 425 (5th Cir. 1975), in which an insurer asserts a legal defense to the incontestability clause based on its definition of sickness as excluding disabilities that manifested themselves prior to the date of issue of the policy). The District Court declined to decide the issue of the legality of Revere's disability policy, holding that Revere was entitled to assert the Forman defense and that any opinion concerning the interpretation of the policy would be an inappropriate advisory opinion. The Supreme Court found that the question of whether the policy definitions conflicted with the statutorily required incontestability clause was a question of law on which Deonier's punitive damages claim rested and thus did not constitute an inappropriate advisory opinion. Because the incontestability clause is required by statute, interpretation of language in the clause must be construed to effectuate legislative intent, not the intent of the parties, and the incontestability clause takes precedence over other language in the policy. In this case, the definitional and coverage provisions purported to limit available coverage to disabilities caused by sickness or disease that first manifested after the date on which the policy was issued and to exclude coverage for preexisting conditions that were not disclosed on the application; at the same time, the incontestability clause barred the insurer from denying coverage because a sickness or physical condition had existed before the date on which the policy was issued, creating a conflict in which the incontestability clause must control. Consequently, Revere's assertion of the Forman defense violated Montana law, and denial of coverage for a disability, whether or not the causative sickness first manifested itself before the policy's date of issue, was barred by the incontestability clause. Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2000 MT 238, 301 M 347, 9 P3d 622, 57 St. Rep. 989 (2000), following Galanty v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 1 P3d 658 (Calif. 2000).

Failure to Promptly Investigate Claims and Coverage — Bad Faith: A jury found no debatable question of insurance coverage. Liability for exercising bad faith was proper when evidence indicated the insurance company failed to promptly investigate insured's claims and coverage by taking 9 months for an investigation that could have been done professionally in 2 weeks, failed to inform insured of potential coverage under an extended benefits policy provision, and failed to provide coverage for large claims after accepting premiums and paying smaller previous claims. Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115, 43 St. Rep. 2243 (1986).

Waiver of Right to Deny Insurance Coverage — Independent Investigation: Where an insurance company made an independent investigation of the employee status of an insured, found that he was covered, and then later denied coverage to the detriment of the insured, reliance on the investigation constituted waiver of the right to deny coverage even if facts of the employee status were misrepresented. Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115, 43 St. Rep. 2243 (1986).

Standard of Lawful Basis for Refusal to Decline Payment of Claim — Standard Not Met by Reliance on Inadmissible Evidence: An insurer must meet the standard of a lawful basis for refusal to decline payment of an insured's claim for an insured's loss. Reliance by the insurer on inadmissible evidence of arson by the insured in declining payment of an insured's loss does not meet the standard of a lawful basis for refusal of the insured's claim. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

33-15-503. Forms for proof of loss to be furnished.

Case Notes

Preliminary Proof of Loss — Quantum of Proof Required: Where preliminary proof is required under an insurance policy, the insured is not bound to give such proof as is necessary in a court of justice, the best evidence within his power to give at the time being sufficient to put the insurer upon inquiry to determine whether he is liable. Caldwell v. Wash. First Nat'l Ins. Co., 94 M 431, 23 P2d 257 (1933).

33-15-504. Claims administration not waiver.

CASE DECIDED UNDER THIS SECTION

Waiver of Defects in Proof of Loss: Insurer's receipt and retention for 60 days of statement of loss due to fire constituted waiver of defense that insured failed to provide adequate proof of loss. Staggers v. USF&G Co., 159 M 254, 496 P2d 1161 (1972).

CASES DECIDED UNDER FORMER "WAIVER OF DEFECTS" LAW

Failure to Demand Not a Waiver: The fact that an insurer, even with notice of loss, fails to demand that the insured comply with the stipulation as to proofs of loss does not constitute a waiver unless coupled with other facts calculated to lead the insured to belief that such proofs need not be made. Conlon v. N. Life Ins. Co., 108 M 473, 92 P2d 284 (1939).

Failure to Plead Nonavailability of Proof of Loss Form: Where, in an action on a policy containing provisions for sickness and indemnity for loss of time, claimed forfeited because of nonpayment of premium, plaintiff, prior to passage of this section, claimed that the company waived proof of loss of time by a rider attached to the policy because of its failure promptly to furnish forms on which to make proof, but such failure not being pleaded or proved, there was no foundation upon which the claim of waiver could be based. Conlon v. N. Life Ins. Co., 108 M 473, 92 P2d 284 (1939).

Waiver of Defects in Proof of Loss — Failure by Insurer to Object to Deficiency: Where the insured has attempted to make proof of loss, even though it be insufficient or defective, the burden is cast upon the insurance company to make objection thereto or it will be considered to have waived the defect or insufficiency. Caldwell v. Wash. First Nat'l Ins. Co., 94 M 431, 23 P2d 257 (1933).

Letters Over Period of Time With Insured — Waiver of Proof of Loss: Where a fire insurance company for 9 months after a fire made no specific objection on the ground that the insured had failed to file proof of loss, it waived that requirement of the policy, statements in letters sent to the insured that what was said therein was said "without waiving any of the provisions of the policy", not meeting the requirement of specific objection required by section 40-607, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed). Altermatt v. Rocky Mtn. Fire Ins. Co., 85 M 419, 279 P 243 (1929).

Defects in Preliminary Proof of Loss — Waiver by Untimely Objection: Where a fire insurance policy required preliminary proofs of loss and they were presented in due time but were defective, such defects were waived by the failure of the insurer to make objection to them within a reasonable time; especially so, where such delay operated to delay the time of payment of the loss or was for such a period as to render it impossible to remedy the defects within the 60-day time limit fixed by the policy. Fed. Land Bank v. Rocky Mtn. Fire Ins. Co., 85 M 405, 279 P 239 (1929).

Complete Investigation by Insurer — Waiver of Failure to Provide Proof of Loss: Failure to furnish proof of a loss by fire as required by the policy was waived under section 40-607, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), where the president of a mutual insurance company, after receiving notice of loss, appointed a committee which went to the scene of the fire and did all it would have done under a formal proof of loss duly filed and did not inform the insured that anything further would be required, the claim being rejected for other reasons. La Bonte v. Mut. Fire & Lightning Ins. Co., 75 M 1, 241 P 631 (1925).

Oral Approval of Proof of Loss by Adjuster: Under section 40-608, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), defects in proofs of loss sustained by fire could be waived and were waived by an adjuster of defendant insurance company by advising plaintiff that the proofs exhibited to him, after certain amendments made, were "all right". Morrison v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co., 72 M 97, 231 P 905 (1924).

Failure to Disclose Lack of Proof of Loss — Waiver of Requirement: Notwithstanding a clause in a hail insurance policy that defendant company's agents had not the power to orally waive any of its provisions, they could, under section 40-608, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), be held to have waived a provision therein for proof of loss by failing to promptly advise the insured, in their negotiations for settlement, that delay in payment of the loss was caused by absence of proof of loss or that the company would rely upon his omission to make the necessary proof. Ames v. Minneapolis Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 69 M 177, 220 P 747 (1923).

Settlement Offer — Construed as Waiver: Where insured had failed to furnish a sworn statement of proof of loss as he was required to do under the provisions of the policy but the company's adjuster notwithstanding such failure had made offers of settlement, defendant waived the requirement even though the policy provided that such act on the part of its adjuster should not constitute a waiver. Pasherstnik v. Cont. Ins. Co., 67 M 19, 214 P 603 (1923).

Notice of Casualty Detailed — Failure to Demand Formal Proof of Loss: When notice of a casualty and proof of resulting death are incorporated in the same communication to the insurer and the proof of the cause of death, with the attendant facts, meets all the requirements of the policy, except that the statement is not as full as it might be, the failure of the insurer to demand more explicit proof is a waiver of his right to thereafter object to its sufficiency. Da Rin v. Cas. Co. of Am., 41 M 175, 108 P 649 (1910).

Case Notes

Purchase of Separate, Specific Motor Vehicle Policy Not Considered to Terminate Coverage as After-Acquired Vehicle Under Prior Policy: Prior to purchasing a Ford Escort, Fitzpatrick had a liability policy (policy one) in effect that provided coverage of $500,000 per occurrence, identified three vehicles as insured, and provided similar coverage for any newly acquired car obtained during the policy period, but only until Fitzpatrick asked for insurance on the newly acquired vehicle and paid any required additional premium or within 30 days of purchase, whichever was shorter. After buying the Escort and within the required time, Fitzpatrick requested a separate policy (policy two) for that vehicle, with coverage of $100,000 per occurrence, but was never billed for any additional premium. Both policies were in effect when Christensen was injured while riding in the Escort. The insurer claimed that $100,000 was available under policy two and tendered that amount to pay health care providers and the various claimants. Christensen asked the District Court to conclude that additional coverage was available under the "after-acquired vehicle" provision in policy one, asserting that both policies should be stacked to provide a total of $600,000 of coverage. The District Court relied on Bramlett v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 468 P2d 157 (Kans. 1970), and Beck v. Aetna Cas. & Surety Co., 553 P2d 397 (Colo. 1976), in holding that the purpose of after-acquired vehicle coverage is to provide automatic coverage only until coverage on the new vehicle is obtained, that because a separate, specific policy had been requested, the Escort was not an after-acquired vehicle under policy one, and that therefore coverage should be limited to $100,000. The Supreme Court distinguished Bramlett and Beck because the policy language in those cases was not the same and found the reasoning in Carey v. St. Farm Mut. Ins. Co., 367 F2d 938 (4th Cir. 1966), to be more persuasive. In the present case, the policy did not require Fitzpatrick to elect coverage if more than one policy was applicable, as it did in Bramlett and Beck. Rather, as in Carey, the clear policy language expressly extended coverage to all after-acquired vehicles, provided that notice was timely. Therefore, the District Court erred when it concluded that the purchase of specific coverage under policy two terminated coverage as an after-acquired vehicle under policy one. If other conditions of after-acquired vehicle coverage are met, coverage on the newly acquired vehicle attaches at the time of acquisition and for the policy period unless the insured refuses to pay any additional premium that is requested, which she was not. Further, Fitzpatrick's policy limiting the maximum amount recoverable to the highest applicable limit under any one policy, when more than one company policy applied to the same occurrence, was found to comport with Montana's antistacking provisions in 33-23-203. The highest applicable limit in this case was $500,000 under policy one, of which $400,000 remained, and the case was reversed to make the additional money available. Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624, 57 St. Rep. 1608 (2000).

Binder Automatically Void Upon Issuance of Policy — Notice Requirement Inapplicable: Watts, a cantaloupe and grain farmer, applied for insurance to cover his cantaloupe crop by signing an insurance binder. However, when the policy was subsequently issued, coverage of the grain crop was provided, but the reference to coverage of the cantaloupe crop was crossed out. When Watts's claim for hail damage to the cantaloupe crop was denied, Watts sued, alleging breach of contract. The District Court's grant of summary judgment to the insurance company was affirmed. The Supreme Court held that the binder issued to cover Watts's cantaloupe crop was automatically voided upon issuance of the later policy and that expiration of the binder upon issuance of the policy was not a cancellation requiring 10 days' notification. Watts v. Westland Farm Mut. Ins. Co., 271 M 256, 895 P2d 626, 52 St. Rep. 430 (1995).

Case Notes

Policy Modification Reducing Uninsured Motorist Coverage Constituting Less Favorable Terms Requiring Notice to Insured — Adequacy of Notice: Prior to 1996 and in anticipation of Supreme Court antistacking decisions, the insurer converted Robertus's uninsured/underinsured motorist policy to charge Robertus a single premium for all seven of Robertus's vehicles instead of requiring Robertus to pay a separate amount for each vehicle, which resulted in a total coverage of $300,000. However, the insurer did not send a separate notice of the change to Robertus. When Robertus was subsequently injured in one of the vehicles, Robertus sought to recover the total policy amount for all seven vehicles in the amount of $2.1 million, but the insurer agreed to pay only $300,000. Robertus sued on grounds that because the insurer failed to provide notice of the policy change, Robertus was entitled to up to $2.1 million. The District Court held that Robertus was effectively notified of the change because of the significant reduction in the price of the policy and the changes noted on the declarations page. Robertus appealed. The Supreme Court concluded that Robertus would have been entitled to stack the seven policies under the law in effect at the time of the accident and prior to the policy change, that the insurer's attempt to avoiding stacking by revising the policy to reduce Robertus's coverage by nearly $2 million constituted less favorable terms requiring the insurer to provide notice to Robertus pursuant to the 1995 version of 33-15-1106, and that the District Court erred in concluding otherwise. Robertus v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 2008 MT 207, 344 M 157, 189 P3d 582 (2008).

Common-Law Action Based on Events Occurring Before Insurance Claim: A renewed liability policy contained a change in an exclusion for pollution incidents. Following that, a claim, and defense of the insureds in a suit against them, for a pollution incident was denied. The insureds sued the insurer for negligence, bad faith, and breach of a fiduciary duty. The District Court granted the insurer summary judgment on the ground that these were common-law tort claims barred by the provision of 33-18-242, which provides that an insured suffering damages from the handling of an insurance claim may sue for breach of contract, for fraud, or under that section, but not under any other theory or cause of action. The Supreme Court reversed on the grounds that the insureds' claims were not for damages resulting from the handling of the claim because the cause of action focused on events that occurred prior to the filing and handling of the claim, that is, the failure to inform the insureds of the policy change, and that the insureds alleged pure common-law claims without adding violations under Title 33, ch. 18, commonly known as the Unfair Trade Practices Act. Thomas v. NW. Nat'l Ins. Co., 1998 MT 343, 292 M 357, 973 P2d 804, 55 St. Rep. 1388 (1998).

Complaint Claiming Insurer Had Duty to Notify Insureds of Policy Change — Raising Statutory Duty to Inform for First Time on Appeal: Although the insureds did not raise in the District Court the statutory obligation of an insurer to inform an insured of a policy change on renewal of the policy, the insureds' complaint alleged that the insurer had a duty to notify the insureds of the policy change. Thus, the insurer's claim that the statutory obligation could not be raised on appeal because it was not raised in District Court was rejected. The statute was simply legal support for the complaint's claim of duty to notify, not a new liability theory. Thomas v. NW. Nat'l Ins. Co., 1998 MT 343, 292 M 357, 973 P2d 804, 55 St. Rep. 1388 (1998).

Duty to Inform Insured of Change in Policy Exclusion — Specific Notice as Against Notice by Providing Renewal Policy With the Change: This section provides that if an insurer offers to renew a policy on less favorable terms, the new terms take effect on the policy renewal date only if the insurer mailed or delivered notice of the new terms to the insured at least 30 days (2003 amendment increased notice period to 45 days) before the expiration date. That section required the insurer to inform the insured of the change in pollution coverage exclusion in a liability policy because an insurer has an affirmative duty to provide adequate notice to the insured of changes in coverage. The question whether giving the insured an amended policy that referred to and contained the pollution coverage exclusion change constituted sufficient notice should have gone to trial, and it was reversible error requiring remand of the issue to grant the insurer summary judgment under the general principle that an insured has a duty to read and examine the policy. That principle is not absolute, and the extent of the duty to read the policy depends on what is reasonable under the facts and circumstances of each case. For a renewal policy, the insured's duty to read it may be less than the duty to read the original policy. Thomas v. NW. Nat'l Ins. Co., 1998 MT 343, 292 M 357, 973 P2d 804, 55 St. Rep. 1388 (1998).

Failure to Inform Insureds of Change in Renewed Policy as Bad Faith: A renewed liability policy contained a change in an exclusion for pollution incidents. Following that, a claim, and defense of the insureds in a suit against them, for a pollution incident was denied. The insurer claimed that the insureds should have read the policy and would have noticed the change if the policy had been read. The insureds claimed that the insurer should have notified the insureds of the change. It was error for the District Court to grant the insurer summary judgment on the insureds' bad faith claim. Under Story v. Bozeman, 242 M 436, 791 P2d 767 (1990), the scope of the tort of bad faith was limited to a contractual setting in which special circumstances exist between the parties and the matter is not otherwise controlled by specific statutory provisions. The court adopted the following five elements for special circumstances: (1) the contract parties are in inherently unequal bargaining positions; (2) the complainant had a nonprofit motive for entering into the contract; (3) ordinary contract damages are inadequate because they do not require the party in the superior position to account for its actions and do not make the inferior party whole; (4) the complainant is especially vulnerable because of the type of harm that it may suffer and of necessity must place trust in the other party to perform; and (5) the other party is aware of the vulnerability. In this case, the Story test was met. Thomas v. NW. Nat'l Ins. Co., 1998 MT 343, 292 M 357, 973 P2d 804, 55 St. Rep. 1388 (1998).

Failure to Inform Insureds of Change in Renewed Policy as Breach of Fiduciary Duty: A renewed liability policy contained a change in an exclusion for pollution incidents. Following that, a claim, and defense of insureds in a suit against them, for a pollution incident was denied. The insurer claimed that the insureds should have read the policy and would have noticed the change if the policy had been read. The insureds claimed that the insurer should have notified the insureds of the change. It was error for the District Court to grant the insurer summary judgment on the insureds' claim of breach of fiduciary duty. Thomas v. NW. Nat'l Ins. Co., 1998 MT 343, 292 M 357, 973 P2d 804, 55 St. Rep. 1388 (1998).

Insurer Wrongfully Refusing Coverage — No Attorney Fees: The insurer argued that it was not obligated to provide coverage for an accident in which its insured was involved. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that the insurance company had wrongfully refused to cover the insured's losses but refused to uphold the award of attorney fees. The Supreme Court stated that although attorney fees could be awarded in the absence of a statute or contract provision in cases where the insurer has breached its obligation to defend, the court would not extend the exception to include instances where the insurer wrongfully refused to provide coverage. Yovish v. United Serv. Auto. Ass'n, 243 M 284, 794 P2d 682, 47 St. Rep. 1224 (1990), overruled in Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 2003 MT 98, 315 M 231, 69 P3d 652 (2003).

1993 Amendment: Chapter 528 in (2)(a), at beginning, substituted "two" for "three" and in second sentence, after "The members must", deleted "reside in Montana and shall"; inserted (2)(d) adding one representative of insured employer; in (4), near beginning, inserted reference to subsection (2)(d) and near middle, after "producers", inserted "and employers"; in (5), near beginning, inserted "must be staffed by the rating organization and"; inserted (6) regarding public review of documents; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 24, 1993.

1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 528, L. 1993, provided: "A statement of intent is required because this bill clarifies that the classification and rating committee has the power to promulgate rules as may be necessary for the conduct of the business of the committee. The classification and rating committee is statutorily created, and as the district court held in Cause No. BDV-91-1585, state of Montana, first judicial district, entitled State Compensation Mutual Insurance Fund v. R/E Developers, Inc., decided August 14, 1992, the classification and rating committee is a state agency as defined by 2-3-102. In that decision, the court held that the committee shall promulgate and publish its procedural rules pursuant to the Montana Administrative Procedure Act (MAPA). The committee, however, has never been given either express rulemaking authority by the legislature, nor has it promulgated any procedural rules pursuant to MAPA.

In providing express rulemaking authority to the classification and rating committee, it is the legislature's intent that the business of the committee be conducted pursuant to the requirements of the open meeting laws of the state and that the public be given the opportunity to participate as provided in Title 2, chapter 3, parts 1 and 2. At the same time, as a committee statutorily charged with reviewing classifications and with hearing appeals of classifications of affected insurers and insured employers, the classification and rating committee has historically held informal hearings of classification appeals. This has resulted in an inexpensive and relatively expeditious process for the presentation of grievances. It is the intent of the legislature that this informal process be continued and thus the hearings process itself is exempt from the requirements of MAPA."

Name Change — Directions to Code Commissioner: Section 14, Ch. 630, L. 1993, provided: "Wherever the name "state compensation mutual insurance fund", meaning the fund established in 39-71-2313, appears in the Montana Code Annotated or in legislation enacted by the 1993 legislature, the code commissioner is directed to change the name to "state compensation insurance fund"." The phrase appeared in this section and was changed by the Code Commissioner as directed.

1989 Amendments: Chapter 613 in (2)(c) changed references to Division of Workers' Compensation, Division, and administrator of the Division to references to state compensation mutual insurance fund, state fund, and executive director of the state fund; and made minor change in phraseology. Amendment effective on the earlier of signing of executive order creating state compensation mutual insurance fund or January 1, 1990.

Chapter 713 substituted references to insurance producer for references to insurance agent or agent. Amendment effective January 1, 1990.

1981 Amendment: Substituted the section, relating to classification and rating committee, for provisions that entitled the division of workers' compensation to membership, without election, on any committee of a rating organization of which it was a member and that set the membership of the committee at three with additional members representing stock insurers (one) and nonstock insurers (one).

Initial Appointments: Section 3, Ch. 114, L. 1981, provided: "When the committee is initially formed in 1981, appointments of members under subsection (2)(a) of 33-16-1007 [renumbered 33-16-1011] shall fill terms as follows: one for 1 year, one for 2 years, and one for 3 years, as designated by the commissioner of insurance."

Chapter Case Notes

Fixed and Permanent Relationship of Independent Agent — Agent's Knowledge as Company's Knowledge: A person employed by an insurance company for 37 years enjoyed a fixed and permanent relationship as the company's agent and, regardless of the fact that as an independent agent he sold other types of insurance, the agent's knowledge was considered knowledge held by the company. Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115, 43 St. Rep. 2243 (1986).

Insurance Agent Not Responsible as Principal: There is nothing within this chapter that would take insurance agents out of the general rule in 28-10-702, which sets forth the only conditions wherein an agent would be liable on a contract entered into by him on behalf of his principal (an insurance company), even though the agent here, a finance and insurance agency that sells disability insurance as an agent for an insurance company, is collecting money lent to a customer who was denied coverage by the insurance company and the agency is a beneficiary of the insurance. Budget Ins. & Fin. v. Leighty, 186 M 368, 607 P2d 1125 (1980).

Liability for Issuance of Unauthorized Policy: Under Montana law, insurer was entitled to recover from agency and its parent corporation the entire loss arising from issuance by the agency of unauthorized policy, even though the insurer had received partial reimbursement from its reinsurer. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co. v. G. Gordon Symons Co., 631 F2d 130 (9th Cir. 1980).

It is the intent of the Legislature that rules adopted by the commissioner be aimed at protecting the consumer who chooses to use the services of a public adjuster. The rules should provide for an examination prior to licensing to ensure the competency of the adjuster. The rules may also provide regulation and bonding requirements to ensure that the consumer contracting with the public adjuster is protected in the event the public adjuster does not fulfill his contractual obligation to the consumer."

Title 6, chapter 6, subchapter 16, ARM Public adjusters.

Case Notes

Adjusters Encompassed in Definition of Administrator — Jury Instruction Proper: At his trial for felony theft by insurance fraud, the defendant objected to a jury instruction offered by the state that an administrator is a person who adjusts or settles claims in connection with life, disability, property, or casualty insurance and therefore was encompassed by the insurance fraud statute. The District Court concluded that independent adjusters were not excluded from the statutory definition of "administrator" and gave the state's instruction. The Supreme Court upheld the jury instruction, holding that the definition of the term states that an administrator may be a person who adjusts or settles claims and noting that while the definition excludes 12 specific categories of persons or entities who are not administrators, independent adjusters are not one of those exclusions. St. v. Schaeffer, 2014 MT 47, 374 Mont. 93, 321 P.3d 809.

Presence of Insurance Adjuster Rather Than Attorney at Prelitigation Mediation Conference Not Violative of Insurer's Duty to Defend: An insurer sent an insurance adjuster rather than an attorney to a prelitigation mediation conference. Defendant contended that this violated the insurer's statutory duty to defend under the policy. The District Court held that the insurer met its obligation by actively participating in the mediation, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court noted that the duty to defend encompasses functions that can only be fulfilled by a licensed attorney, but that insurance adjusters play a vital role in the resolution of claims prior to the initiation of litigation and further noted that public policy encourages settlements and avoiding unnecessary litigation. Requiring that counsel be retained for informal settlement conferences could hinder the negotiation process and contravene the policy of encouraging out-of-court settlements. The mediation was not part of any judicial proceeding, and the insurer did not violate its duty to defend by sending an insurance adjuster to mediation. The District Court was affirmed. Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Johnson, 2009 MT 442, 354 M 192, 224 P3d 613 (2009).

(4) A person licensed to sell coverage only for the all-risk federal crop insurance program shall receive a license restricted to that purpose.

(5) A representative of a fraternal benefit society who solicits and negotiates insurance contracts is an insurance producer and is subject to the same licensing requirements as those for an insurance producer, except that a license is not required of:

(a) an officer, employee, or secretary of a fraternal benefit society or of a subordinate lodge or branch of a fraternal benefit society who devotes substantially all of his time to activities other than the solicitation or negotiation of insurance contracts and who receives no commission or other compensation directly dependent upon the number or amount of insurance contracts solicited or negotiated; or

(4) No agent shall place any business, other than coverage of his own risks, with any insurer as to which he does not then hold a validated appointment or license as agent under this chapter, except as provided in 33-17-1104 as to life or disability insurance agents"; at end of (2) substituted "a license" for "licenses and appointments"; near middle of (3), before "full-time employee", deleted "bona fide"; inserted (5) relating to representatives of a fraternal benefit society; and made minor changes in phraseology. L. March 1986. The amendments were not codified because the temporary version of the section terminated prior to the amendments becoming effective. (b) section 18 [33-17-1104 (now repealed)] authorizes the commissioner to determine the instances in which a life or disability insurance agent may place excess or rejected risks in an insurer who has not appointed him as agent; and

(c) section 2 [33-17-201] authorizes the commissioner to prescribe by rule and make available the forms required in connection with an application for an insurance agent license.

(2) The legislature intends that the rules that the commissioner adopts to implement this bill be designed to protect Montana insurance consumers.

Case Notes

Placing Business Prior to Issuance of Appointment — Violation: A nonresident agent who solicited and placed business with an insurance company prior to receiving a validated appointment from that company, as required by the Insurance Commissioner, violated this section and was properly fined $250. Trout v. Bennett, 252 M 416, 830 P2d 81, 49 St. Rep. 303 (1992).

Licensing Requirement — Protection of the Public: The licensing requirement is primarily for the protection of the public and is not meant to create private rights between the agent and insurance company. Standard Ins. Co. v. Sturdevant, 173 M 23, 566 P2d 52 (1977).

License — No Rights to Limit Competition Conferred: Licensure of insurance agent is a regulatory matter for protection of public and not a franchise, hence a licensed agent was not a proper party to bring an action against State Auditor to have the Montana license of a foreign insurance corporation declared void. Waite v. Holmes, 133 M 512, 327 P2d 399 (1958).

Case Notes

License Revocation for Felony Theft: Plaintiff's occupational license as a life insurance agent was revoked solely because she was convicted of felony theft. No effort was made to determine whether the conviction related to the public health, welfare, and safety as it applied to the practice of her occupation. The Supreme Court held that the mere finding that a licensee was convicted of a felony involving moral turpitude is not a sufficient basis upon which to hold that the conviction is related to the public health, welfare, or safety as it relates to the licensed occupation. (See 1989 amendment.) Mills v. Comm'r of Ins., 226 M 387, 736 P2d 102, 44 St. Rep. 743 (1987), overruled in Erickson v. St., 282 M 367, 938 P2d 625, 54 St. Rep. 395 (1997).

Ambiguity in Insurance Policy as to Submission of Claims Resolved in Favor of Insured: Golt worked as a civilian employee of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) until he was discharged from employment in 1994 for cause. Thirty days after termination, Golt died of carbon monoxide poisoning. As a benefit of employment, Golt was covered by an accident insurance policy issued by General American Life Insurance Company (General) and also by Aetna Life Insurance Company (Aetna) under a group life and accident and health insurance policy. AAFES transmitted the Aetna claim, but did not transmit the General claim. A subsequent request for benefits from General was denied because the claim was not submitted within 20 days after the covered loss occurred. Golt's wife asserted that by tendering the claim to AAFES within the 20-day period, she satisfied the notice requirements of the General policy, while General contended that the policy plainly informed both Mrs. Golt and her attorneys that notice of claim and proof of loss were to be sent to the National Accident Insurance Underwriters (NAIU) or one of General's agents and that AAFES was the policyholder, not a General agent. The Supreme Court held that the notice provision in the policy was ambiguous because it gave an invalid address for NAIU and did not list any acceptable General agents. However, the notice did allow claims to be submitted through the policyholder/employer. For purposes of this case, when accepting or processing claims, AAFES, with the express permission of General, was performing a function of the insurer and was properly considered an agent of the insurer. Mrs. Golt's claim was thus timely submitted. Golt v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 2000 MT 155, 300 M 142, 2 P3d 841, 57 St. Rep. 613 (2000).

Duty of Insurance Broker With Respect to Insured or Insurer: The insureds asked First National Insurance, Inc., to cancel the policy that First National had obtained for them from Nautilus Insurance Company. First National informed Nautilus of the cancellation, but the policy was to remain in effect for 3 months because of Nautilus's practice of retaining a portion of the paid premium. During that time, the insureds suffered a loss and Nautilus paid the claim. Nautilus then sued First National, alleging that First National as Nautilus's agent had a duty to take additional steps on Nautilus's behalf. The Supreme Court held that there was no duty because the broker acted as agent with respect to an insured and an insurer on the basis of which party requested an action to be taken. In the present case, the insureds had requested the cancellation and the broker was therefore acting on their behalf. Nautilus Ins. Co. v. First Nat'l Ins., Inc., 254 M 296, 837 P2d 409, 49 St. Rep. 802 (1992).

Fixed and Permanent Relationship of Independent Agent — Agent's Knowledge as Company's Knowledge: A person employed by an insurance company for 37 years enjoyed a fixed and permanent relationship as the company's agent and, regardless of the fact that as an independent agent he sold other types of insurance, the agent's knowledge was considered knowledge held by the company. Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115, 43 St. Rep. 2243 (1986).

Involuntary Trustee of Insurance Refunds: An insurance company that issues a master policy in contemplation of the issuance of certificates of insurance to designees of the owner named in the master policy and then issues those certificates, insures by separate contracts of insurance those designees. Plaintiff, as such a designee, was entitled to premium refunds made to the defendant insurance agent by the insurer, and the defendant became an involuntary trustee of the refunds for the plaintiff. Credit Alliance Corp. v. Sturdevant-Van Wormer Ins. Co., 465 F. Supp. 1115 (D.C. Mont. 1979).

(c) section 2 [33-17-201] authorizes the commissioner to prescribe by rule and make available the forms required in connection with an application for an insurance agent license.

(2) The legislature intends that the rules that the commissioner adopts to implement this bill be designed to protect Montana insurance consumers.

(3) The legislature further intends that the commissioner adopt those rules in accordance with 33-1-313, which grants the commissioner general rulemaking authority and which permits the commissioner:

(a) to make only reasonable rules that do not extend, modify, or conflict with any law of this state or with any reasonable implication of those laws; and

(b) to make or amend those rules only after a hearing of which notice has been given as required by 33-1-703 [now repealed]."

Part 12
Insurance Producer and Consultant Continuing Education Act

Part Compiler's Comments

1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 622, L. 1993, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it authorizes the commissioner of insurance to promulgate rules relating to the course content, instructors, material, instructional format, department of insurance forms, and procedures that will compose the continuing education program for insurance producers and consultants and the fees related to the costs of processing the documents and preparing and providing the services mandated by this bill. The legislature intends that the rules adopted to implement this bill be designed principally to protect the insurance-buying public in Montana by ensuring that insurance producers and consultants complete appropriate education activities as a condition of continued licensure. To the extent that they do not conflict with this bill, the model regulations on agents' continuing education adopted by the national association of insurance commissioners in July 1990 express principles that are consistent with this legislative intent and may be used as a model for the continuing education program. The legislature further intends that the commissioner adopt the rules in accordance with 33-1-313, which grants the commissioner general rulemaking authority that permits the commissioner:

(1) to make only reasonable rules that do not extend, modify, or conflict with any laws of this state or with any reasonable implication of those laws; and

CHAPTER 18
UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES

Chapter Case Notes

Insurer Required to Establish Actual Damages — Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage: Plaintiff insurance company sued the defendants for making derogatory comments regarding its leadership and financial condition and alleging violations of the Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA) and interference with prospective economic advantage. The District Court granted summary judgment for the defendants, holding that the UTPA does not create a private right of action by one insurer against another and that the plaintiff had failed to establish damages. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that a business entity must establish actual and quantifiable economic damages and that the plaintiff failed do so with claims of general and reputational damages. Victory Ins. Co. v. Mont. St. Fund, 2015 MT 82, 378 Mont. 388, 344 P.3d 977.

No Common-Law Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies Requirement Imposed for Purposes of ERISA Claim: Eldredge brought suit against ASARCO for failure to pay him a retirement benefit pursuant to the company's "7⅞0" retirement benefit plan. ASARCO claimed that Eldredge had failed to exhaust his administrative remedies. The Supreme Court found that while the Employee Retirement Income Security Act contained no requirement for exhaustion of remedies, the federal courts imposed a "prudential" exhaustion requirement but allowed exceptions to that requirement. The Supreme Court declined to impose the requirement because ASARCO had filed nothing with the District Court to explain the extent or application of the exhaustion requirement other than to make one claim that the requirement existed. Eldredge v. ASARCO, Inc., 2011 MT 80, 360 Mont. 112, 252 P.3d 182.

33-18-101. Purposes.

Case Notes

Insurer's Liability for Misrepresentation of Policy Provisions: Plaintiffs submitted a claim for medical expenses, and even though the insurer had paid similar claims on several prior occasions under the same policy, the insurer denied the claim, so plaintiffs sued for misrepresentation of the policy provisions. The District Court granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment on grounds that: (1) there was no intent by the insurer to misrepresent the policy coverage; (2) the insurer refuted any alleged intent to misrepresent by paying the claim after the misrepresentation occurred; and (3) plaintiffs' claim was not actionable because plaintiffs knew that the statement denying coverage was false. On appeal, the Supreme Court rejected the insurer's arguments. First, 33-18-201 does not distinguish between intentional and unintentional misrepresentation, but rather prohibits misrepresentation categorically, so the issue of whether an insurer intended to misrepresent policy provisions is not a factor. Second, an insurer's conduct after a misrepresentation has no connection to whether a misrepresentation actually occurred. Third, 33-18-201 contains no exceptions for misrepresentations made to claimants who accurately comprehend the meaning of a policy. Rather, the statute is intended to protect all claimants, regardless of their level of knowledge regarding the policy, so a claimant's knowledge regarding the veracity of the insurer's statement concerning policy coverage is irrelevant in determining whether a misrepresentation occurred. Therefore, the District Court erred in granting the insurer's summary judgment motion on the misrepresentation claim. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008).

In McVey v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 346, 372 Mont. 511, 313 P.3d 191, the Supreme Court held that the fact that a claim is filed by someone other than the insured does not preclude the insured from invoking the protections of 33-18-201(4) and 33-18-242 and clarified that the reference in Lorang to a "claimant" did not intend to control the scope of the protections provided or otherwise bar an insured from pursuing a claim pursuant to these statutes.

Adoption of "Cause" Interpretation of "Occurrence" Provision In Action Regarding Unfair Trade Practices Statutes — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: The parents of a 13-month-old child who died as a result of a toxic dose of medication administered by a day-care facility, filed an action claiming that the insurer's offer of $300,000 misrepresented the insurance policy liability limit in violation of Montana's unfair trade practices statutes. The parents alleged that their actions against the day-care center and the individual administering the drug entitled them under their third-party rights to twice the policy limit under an aggregate limits provision in the policy for "all occurrences". Relying on the policy language and the analysis in Greaves v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 984 F. Supp. 12 (D.D.C. 1997), affirmed in 172 F3d 919 (C.A.D.C. 1998), and Scottsdale Ins. Co. v. Robertson, 788 NE 2d 279 (App. Ct. Ill. 2003), the District Court granted summary judgment for the insurer, concluding that the parents' claims were based on one occurrence during a single policy period and determining that the insurer's liability could not exceed $300,000. On appeal, the Montana Supreme Court affirmed the District Court decision and adopted the "cause" theory used by a majority of courts for interpreting the term "occurrence" in an insurance policy that limits the insurer's liability to a specified amount for each "occurrence" instead of the number of injuries or claims. Heggem v. Capitol Indem. Corp., 2007 MT 74, 336 M 429, 154 P3d 1189 (2007).

Standard of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Applicable to Self-Insurer: A fire, caused by a floating power line owned and maintained by Montana Power Company (MPC) destroyed plaintiff's home and property. In filing a negligence action against MPC, plaintiff also alleged that MPC had breached an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing and violated Title 33, ch. 18, commonly known as the Unfair Trade Practices Act (Act) in the settlement of plaintiff's claim. At trial, the jury was instructed that duties described in the Act applied to MPC. On appeal, MPC argued that the District Court erred, contending that the Act does not apply to a self-insurer such as MPC. The Supreme Court ruled that while the Act does not apply to MPC, "a self-insurer, such as MPC which has a claims department, is held to a standard of good faith and fair dealing when settling claims against it". Ogden v. Mont. Power Co., 44 St. Rep. 330 (1987); on reconsideration, opinion withdrawn and replaced by a holding that the Montana Insurance Code's Unfair Trade Practices Act does not apply to a self-insured entity. Ogden v. Mont. Power Co., 229 M 387, 747 P2d 201, 44 St. Rep. 2068 (1987), followed in Martel v. Mont. Power Co., 231 M 96, 752 P2d 140, 45 St. Rep. 460 (1988).

GENERAL

Damages Under Breach of Contract Claims Considered Compensatory Damages Under Unfair Trade Practices Act for Pursuit of Punitive Damages: In an insurance dispute in which plaintiffs sued the defendant insurer to contest the denial of untimely filed claims, the District Court erred in instructing the jury that it must first find Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA) damages beyond the breach of insurance contract damages in order to consider malice and punitive damages under the UTPA. When an insurer is found to have violated the UTPA, damages due to the breach of insurance contract may constitute compensatory UTPA damages sufficient to present the question of malice and punitive damages to the jury. Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

Erroneous Application of Statute of Limitations — Insurance Dispute: In an insurance dispute in which plaintiffs sued the defendant insurer to contest the denial of untimely filed claims, the District Court erred in applying the statute of limitations from the date the plaintiffs submitted their claim to the insurer rather than from the date the lawsuit was filed. The accrual of a claim does not depend on when a claim is submitted to an insurer; rather, a claim accrues when all elements of that claim have occurred. Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

Notice-Prejudice Rule Applicable in First-Party Insurance Coverage: The notice-prejudice rule applies to first-party insurance coverage disputes. Under this rule, an insurer may deny coverage based on an insured's failure to comply with a policy notice provision only if the insurer can demonstrate that it was prejudiced by the late notice. Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

Duplicate Payments Allowed Under Insurance Policy Language: Plaintiff was injured while working on his vehicle. He had a medical insurance policy and a separate motor vehicle policy with a medical payment provision. The medical insurer paid most of the claim. The plaintiff then sought payment of the entirety of the claim from the motor vehicle insurer, who denied the claim. The plaintiff alleged breach of contract and unfair trade practices. The Supreme Court found that the policy language did not limit the plaintiff from receiving a duplicate payment of medical expenses and that there was no basis in contract law, insurance law, or public policy that would prohibit such recovery. Winter v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2014 MT 168, 375 Mont. 351, 328 P.3d 665.

Accident Reconstruction Expert Testimony in Bad Faith Insurance Action Properly Excluded: In a bad faith insurance action filed pursuant to the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA), the defendant insurer hired an expert to reconstruct the accident scene. The results of the reconstruction were admitted at trial through the claims file and the insurer sought to introduce testimony from the expert. The District Court did not err in denying the expert's testimony since the information had already been introduced through the claims file. Peterson v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2010 MT 187, 357 Mont. 293, 239 P.3d 904.

Evidence Not Admitted in Previous Negligence Action Admissible to Show UTPA Violation — No Error by District Court: In a bad faith insurance claim, the District Court allowed the defendant insurer to introduce evidence of a lack of traffic citations, evidence from responding Highway Patrol officers regarding the point of impact, and testimony about the insured's prior driving activity. The evidence had been prohibited from introduction in a federal District Court action on the negligence claim. Distinguishing its holding in Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 Mont. 67, 721 P.2d 303 (1986), the Supreme Court held that in making a determination under the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA), the jury was entitled to evaluate the evidence because it informed the insurer's assessment of the claim and aided the jury's determination of whether a reasonable person, with knowledge of the relevant facts and law, would conclude, for good reason, that the insured was liable for the accident. Peterson v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2010 MT 187, 357 Mont. 293, 239 P.3d 904.

Failure to Define "Reasonably Clear" Liability in Jury Instruction — Reversible Error: The plaintiff, who was injured in a head-on automobile collision, filed a third-party bad faith insurance claim against the defendant insurer under the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA). The plaintiff claimed that the District Court committed reversible error by failing to adequately instruct the jury on the definition of "reasonably clear" liability under UTPA. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded and held that the error in the instruction affected the jury's ability to determine whether the insurer violated UTPA. The Supreme Court adopted a standard for determining when liability is "reasonably clear" for purposes of UTPA, which is "when a reasonable person, with knowledge of the relevant facts and law, would conclude, for good reason, that the defendant is liable to the plaintiff." The Supreme Court noted that this is an objective test in which the trier of fact must consider the facts and circumstances and the relevant legal principles considered by the insurer when evaluating liability. In addition, following courts in Massachusetts and West Virginia, the Supreme Court held that liability is "reasonably clear" when "it is "clear enough" that reasonable people assessing the claim would agree on the issue of liability, and that the facts, circumstances, and applicable law leave little room for objectively reasonable debate about whether liability exists." Peterson v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2010 MT 187, 357 Mont. 293, 239 P.3d 904.

No Error in Refusal to Instruct Jury in UTPA Claim — Proposed Instructions Properly Denied: In a bad faith insurance claim filed pursuant to the Montana Uniform Trade Practices Act (UTPA), the plaintiff sought a jury instruction stating in part that a person shall operate a vehicle at a reduced speed no greater than is reasonable and prudent. The plaintiff also sought an instruction stating that "the lack of any traffic citations does not equate to the lack of civil negligence." The District Court did not err in refusing the instructions since the ultimate issue in the bad faith insurance case was the reasonableness of the insured's conduct. Peterson v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2010 MT 187, 357 Mont. 293, 239 P.3d 904.

Offer of Judgment in Federal Court Not Admission of "Reasonably Clear" Liability under UTPA: The plaintiff claimed that the District Court erred when it concluded as a matter of law that the defendant insurer's offer of judgment in federal District Court did not constitute an admission for purposes of establishing "reasonably clear" liability under the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA). The Supreme Court held that an offer of judgment may constitute an admission of liability for the underlying accident in some circumstances, but it does not constitute an admission of "reasonably clear" liability or have preclusive effect with respect to UTPA. Peterson v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2010 MT 187, 357 Mont. 293, 239 P.3d 904.

Refusal to Instruct Jury on Theory That Attorney Acted as Agent of Insurer Proper — Insured Is Sole Client of Defense Counsel: The plaintiff was injured in a head-on automobile collision with the insured. At the time of the accident, the insured worked for a Canadian company operating in Montana and was insured by the defendant insurer. The plaintiff filed suit against the company in federal District Court after the defendant insurer refused to pay the plaintiff's claims. The plaintiff ultimately accepted an offer of judgment and thereafter filed a bad faith insurance claim against the insurer in state court. Prior to trial, the plaintiff filed a motion in limine arguing that the attorney for the insurer acted as the insurer's agent in his defense of the underlying federal court negligence suit. The District Court denied the motion and a corresponding jury instruction on the issue. The plaintiff alleged that the District Court erred by refusing to instruct the jury on the theory that an attorney who was hired by the insurer to handle the defense of the employer in the underlying negligence claim acted as the agent of the insurer in the denial of the claim. In the claims file, the attorney noted that the insured employee was at least 50% liable for the accident. Under In re Rules, 2000 MT 110, 299 Mont. 321, 2 P.3d 806, in which the Supreme Court held that the insured is the sole client of defense counsel, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the instruction. Peterson v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2010 MT 187, 357 Mont. 293, 239 P.3d 904.

Strict Recitation of UTPA Statutory Language Not Required in Jury Instruction: Defendant insurer asserted that the District Court erred in giving a jury instruction concerning plaintiff's Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA) common-law bad faith claim by substituting the word "claims" for the statutory reference to "coverages", resulting in prejudice to defendant. The Supreme Court first noted that there is no requirement that a District Court adopt verbatim the applicable statutory language when instructing the jury, as long as any modification does not alter the meaning of the statute and the District Court maintains conformity with the law while remaining appropriate in the factual context of the case. In this case, the District Court did not change the meaning of the statute, and because the submission and processing of insurance claims is a more fact-driven process than the issue of insurance coverage, there was no error in including a reference to claims within the purview of the UTPA statutory prohibition in 33-18-201. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009).

Eventual Payment of Claim Not Decisive of Whether Insurer Acted in Good Faith in Effectuating Settlement: Defendant moved for summary judgment on the issue of failure to act in good faith to effectuate prompt settlement of plaintiffs' claim because the claim was paid within a few months of denial of the claim. The Supreme Court held that eventual payment of a claim is not the conclusive factor in determining the good faith issue because an insurer could then summarily deny or ignore a claim that it was clearly obligated to pay and then escape liability by issuing payment after the claimant took steps to enforce the claimant's rights, which would create a financial incentive for unscrupulous insurers to disregard the duty of good faith during the initial stages of a claim. Thus, when an insurer wrongfully denies a claim, subsequent payment of the claim does not establish that the insurer complied with the duty of good faith. Therefore, the fact that the claim was eventually paid does not create an absence of genuine issues of material fact. The issue of breach of the duty to act in good faith was instead one for a jury to decide, and summary judgment for the insurer was inappropriate. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008), followed in McVey v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 346, 372 Mont. 511, 313 P.3d 191.

Failure to Conduct Reasonable Investigation of Insurance Claim — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiffs brought an unfair trade practices claim based on defendant insurer's failure to conduct a reasonable investigation prior to denying plaintiffs' claim for medical expenses. The District Court held that defendant's wrongful denial did not prove that its investigation was unreasonable and that any wrong was promptly cured by defendant's payment of the claim and granted summary judgment for defendant on the claim. On appeal, the Supreme Court disagreed. The reasonableness of an investigation requires that the investigating adjuster examine the pertinent information thoroughly enough to retain and act upon it. In this case, the adjuster had access to plaintiffs' extensive file containing a record of plaintiffs' numerous prior claims for similar medical expenses, defendant's initial denial of those claims, intervention by the Insurance Commissioner on plaintiffs' behalf, defendant's ultimate admission of liability and eventual payment of those claims, and a note in plaintiffs' file that plaintiffs' claims were not to be denied on the basis of the unavailability of policy coverage, yet the adjuster failed to research the records and instead denied the claim. Therefore, plaintiffs were entitled to partial summary judgment on the issue of defendant's failure to conduct a reasonable investigation and the District Court was reversed. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008). See also McVey v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 346, 372 Mont. 511, 313 P.3d 191.

Insurer's Liability for Misrepresentation of Policy Provisions: Plaintiffs submitted a claim for medical expenses, and even though the insurer had paid similar claims on several prior occasions under the same policy, the insurer denied the claim, so plaintiffs sued for misrepresentation of the policy provisions. The District Court granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment on grounds that: (1) there was no intent by the insurer to misrepresent the policy coverage; (2) the insurer refuted any alleged intent to misrepresent by paying the claim after the misrepresentation occurred; and (3) plaintiffs' claim was not actionable because plaintiffs knew that the statement denying coverage was false. On appeal, the Supreme Court rejected the insurer's arguments. First, 33-18-201 does not distinguish between intentional and unintentional misrepresentation, but rather prohibits misrepresentation categorically, so the issue of whether an insurer intended to misrepresent policy provisions is not a factor. Second, an insurer's conduct after a misrepresentation has no connection to whether a misrepresentation actually occurred. Third, 33-18-201 contains no exceptions for misrepresentations made to claimants who accurately comprehend the meaning of a policy. Rather, the statute is intended to protect all claimants, regardless of their level of knowledge regarding the policy, so a claimant's knowledge regarding the veracity of the insurer's statement concerning policy coverage is irrelevant in determining whether a misrepresentation occurred. Therefore, the District Court erred in granting the insurer's summary judgment motion on the misrepresentation claim. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008).

In McVey v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 346, 372 Mont. 511, 313 P.3d 191, the Supreme Court held that the fact that a claim is filed by someone other than the insured does not preclude the insured from invoking the protections of 33-18-201(4) and 33-18-242 and clarified that the reference in Lorang to a "claimant" did not intend to control the scope of the protections provided or otherwise bar an insured from pursuing a claim pursuant to these statutes.

Settlement Not Limited to Compromise Agreements Only: Plaintiffs brought an unfair trade practices claim against defendant insurer for failure to act in good faith in settling plaintiffs' claim. Defendant asserted that a settlement, as used in this section, applied only to compromise agreements. The Supreme Court disagreed. A settlement encompasses both the preliminary payment of individual claims and the final settlement of all claims. The court declined to narrow a settlement to only compromise agreements. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008), following Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997).

Admissibility of Minor Death Verdicts Chart in Unfair Trade Practices Trial: At numerous times during an unfair trade practices trial against an insurer for not reasonably settling an underlying medical malpractice claim, the insurer made reference to and presented a chart summarizing child death verdicts in Montana. The insurer argued that Montana juries have not generally ruled in favor of plaintiffs who seek damages for the death of their children and asserted that this information was of consequence during settlement procedures. A verdict was eventually returned for the insurer, and on appeal, plaintiffs argued that the chart was irrelevant, prejudicial, and inadmissible hearsay. The Supreme Court disagreed. The evidence was offered to demonstrate that knowledge of past verdicts and settlements was critical to the insurer when evaluating malpractice claims and that the evidence provided a basis on which to generate settlement offers and counteroffers. Any prejudicial effect of the chart was outweighed by its probative value because the trial was about the process used by the insurer before entering a settlement. Peterson v. The Doctors' Co., 2007 MT 264, 339 M 354, 170 P3d 459 (2007).

Overly Broad Discovery Request for All of Plaintiffs' Counsels' Files Properly Denied in Unfair Trade Practices Case: Plaintiffs asserted that defendant insurance company committed unfair trade practices in settling plaintiffs' claim against two insured doctors for malpractice. In discovery, the insurer sought to compel production of all of plaintiffs' attorneys' files, claiming that information regarding how plaintiffs valued their own case was relevant as to whether the insurer committed an unfair trade practice. The District Court determined that information in plaintiffs' attorneys' files was per se irrelevant to the question of whether the insurer negotiated in good faith. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that in most unfair trade practices cases, the conduct of the claimant or how the claimant evaluated its own case is irrelevant concerning how the insurer acted, so evidence of the claimant's conduct is generally undiscoverable unless the claimant acts in a way that delays or impairs the insurer's ability to settle (see Spadaro v. Midland Claims Serv., Inc., 227 M 445, 740 P2d 1105 (1987)). Thus, the District Court's ruling that all of plaintiffs' attorneys' files were per se undiscoverable was an overbroad basis on which to deny the discovery request. However, to prevent "fishing expeditions" by an insurer, a discovery request must be narrowly tailored to the insurer's defenses against the claims, and in this case, the request for all of the attorneys' files was far broader than necessary to discover information regarding plaintiffs' alleged delay and impairment of the insurer's ability to settle, so the Supreme Court deferred to the District Court's discovery discretion and held that it was not error to refuse disclosure of all of the attorneys' files. Peterson v. The Doctors' Co., 2007 MT 264, 339 M 354, 170 P3d 459 (2007).

Genuine Issue of Fact Regarding Unfair Trade Practices and Punitive Damages in Insurance Case — Summary Judgment Precluded: Following an auto accident, Shelton filed claims under her insurance policy for medical payments and underinsured motorist coverage. After several unsuccessful attempts at settlement, Shelton amended the complaint 4 years after the accident to add claims for punitive damages and bad faith. The parties agreed to bifurcate the punitive damages and bad faith claims from the underinsured motorist claim. Citing 33-18-242(5), the insurer moved for summary judgment on the punitive damages and bad faith claims on grounds that the insurer had a reasonable basis in law or in fact for contesting the claim or the amount of the claim. The District Court found, with respect to the bad faith claim, that Shelton did not present any material fact that precluded summary judgment and, with regard to the punitive damages claim, that Shelton admitted that there was no factual basis for a claim of malice and that there was no evidence of fraudulent behavior by the insurer. Summary judgment was granted to the insurer, and Shelton appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. Shelton provided evidence tending to show that the insurer failed to collect necessary records and reports and failed to share the information among its own experts, neglected to attempt in good faith to effectuate a settlement, and may have acted with malice in failing to pay Shelton the minimum amount of money that it determined that Shelton deserved. These questions of material fact precluded summary judgment, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Shelton v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 132, 337 M 378, 160 P3d 531 (2007).

Failure of District Court to Rule Whether Collateral Source Reduction Applicable During Settlement Negotiations — Declaratory Judgment Inappropriate Absent Justiciable Controversy: Miller sought a declaratory judgment in District Court concerning whether 27-1-308 regarding collateral source reduction could be applied by insurance companies when evaluating cases and making settlement offers. Miller's motion for a declaratory judgment was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Before a court may exercise declaratory judgment jurisdiction, a justiciable controversy must exist. Seeking a declaratory judgment too early in the proceedings, when other remedies are still available, may amount to an advisory opinion. Here, Miller was requesting the District Court to interject its opinion regarding what factors and circumstances parties may consider in negotiating a settlement. As a matter of state policy, settlement is encouraged, and once a settlement is reached, courts can enforce the agreement. Insurers have a duty to attempt in good faith to negotiate prompt, fair, and equitable settlements in cases in which liability is reasonably clear. In this case, a dispute existed over the settlement amount, but there was no justiciable controversy regarding the existing and genuine rights or interests of the parties. Neither party was legally obligated to settle, nor can a court dictate what factors a party may or may not consider while engaging in a voluntary settlement process. Absent a justiciable controversy, a declaratory judgment was inappropriate. Miller v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 85, 337 M 67, 155 P3d 1278 (2007), following Northfield Ins. Co. v. Mont. Ass'n of Counties, 2000 MT 256, 301 M 472, 10 P3d 813 (2000), and distinguishing Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997).

Adoption of "Cause" Interpretation of "Occurrence" Provision In Action Regarding Unfair Trade Practices Statutes — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: The parents of a 13-month-old child who died as a result of a toxic dose of medication administered by a day-care facility, filed an action claiming that the insurer's offer of $300,000 misrepresented the insurance policy liability limit in violation of Montana's unfair trade practices statutes. The parents alleged that their actions against the day-care center and the individual administering the drug entitled them under their third-party rights to twice the policy limit under an aggregate limits provision in the policy for "all occurrences". Relying on the policy language and the analysis in Greaves v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 984 F. Supp. 12 (D.D.C. 1997), affirmed in 172 F3d 919 (C.A.D.C. 1998), and Scottsdale Ins. Co. v. Robertson, 788 NE 2d 279 (App. Ct. Ill. 2003), the District Court granted summary judgment for the insurer, concluding that the parents' claims were based on one occurrence during a single policy period and determining that the insurer's liability could not exceed $300,000. On appeal, the Montana Supreme Court affirmed the District Court decision and adopted the "cause" theory used by a majority of courts for interpreting the term "occurrence" in an insurance policy that limits the insurer's liability to a specified amount for each "occurrence" instead of the number of injuries or claims. Heggem v. Capitol Indem. Corp., 2007 MT 74, 336 M 429, 154 P3d 1189 (2007).

Attorney Fees Not Recoverable Under Unfair Trade Practices Provisions: When plaintiffs were injured in a collision with a vehicle insured by defendant, they offered to settle their bodily injury claims for $125,000, but the insurer refused. After plaintiffs spent about $43,500 in attorney fees, the insurer settled for $125,000. Plaintiffs then sought to recover their attorney fees under the unfair trade practices provisions of Title 33, ch. 18, but summary judgment was granted to the insurer, so plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Although it could have done so, the Legislature did not construct the unfair trade practices provisions to specifically provide for the recovery of attorney fees. The court recognized the seeming unfairness of plaintiffs having to pay $43,500 to recover the same amount of money that they were willing to accept in the first place, but the court declined to construe the provisions to allow attorney fees to be considered as damages when the Legislature did not do so. Sampson v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 2006 MT 241, 333 M 541, 144 P3d 797 (2006), distinguished in Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

Subrogation Claim for Environmental Remediation Costs Barred by Statute of Limitations: The Montana Petroleum Tank Release Compensation Board submitted a claim to a gas station owner's insurer for reimbursement of environmental remediation expenses. The claim was denied, and the Board filed an action against the owner's insurer and the insurer of a subsequent lessee. In its denial letter, one insurer asserted that because 12 years elapsed before the Board brought its claim, the statute of limitations had run on the claim. The District Court granted summary judgment to both insurers, and the Board appealed. The Supreme Court noted that even if the Board had a claim against the lessee's insurer through subrogation of the owner's insurer's rights, the statute of limitations began to run from the time that all the elements accrued for the owner's insurer to file a claim with the lessee's insurer. The longest possible statute of limitations that could apply was 8 years, so the lessee's insurer was correct that any claim that the Board may have had against it was barred by the statute of limitations. Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. Capitol Indem. Co., 2006 MT 133, 332 M 352, 137 P3d 522 (2006).

Policy of Reimbursement of Nonparticipating Health Care Providers — Violation of Unfair Trade Practices Act: A federal employee who was not reimbursed for the full amount of a medical procedure sued Blue Cross in federal court, alleging various state common-law causes of action and alleging that Blue Cross violated this chapter, commonly known as the Unfair Trade Practices Act, by misrepresenting its policy regarding reimbursement of nonparticipating health care providers. The District Court dismissed the suit against Blue Cross for lack of jurisdiction, ruling that the complaint was a contract dispute and not a dispute involving federal law. On appeal, the Ninth Circuit Court reversed, ruling that the federal remedies available under the Federal Employees Health Benefits Act of 1959 displaced Montana's remedies under this chapter. As a result, the employee's claim was completely preempted. Botsford v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont., Inc., 314 F3d 390 (2002).

Improper Assumption That Defense Verdict in Underlying Negligence Action Precludes Subsequent Unfair Trade Practices Claims — Reversible Error: Plaintiff was involved in an automobile accident when an employee of the Goosebill Ranch struck a vehicle driven by the Cloutiers and then struck plaintiff's vehicle, which was pushed across an intersection and collided with a truck that was proceeding through the intersection. Plaintiff sued Goosebill Ranch for negligence, but the jury returned a verdict for the ranch, and plaintiff appealed. The Cloutiers also sued Goosebill Ranch in a separate action, and in that case, the jury found that the ranch was negligent and awarded the damages to the Cloutiers. The damages were paid by the defendant insurance company. While appeal of plaintiff's negligence case was pending, plaintiff settled, and the judgment against plaintiff was released as part of the settlement, but plaintiff reserved the right to bring a bad faith action against that insurer. Plaintiff then brought an unfair trade practices claim against the insurers, asserting violation of 33-18-242 and alleging claims for outrage or intentional infliction of severe emotional distress. The District Court held that the initial jury verdict for Goosebill Ranch provided the insurers with a reasonable basis defense to plaintiff's subsequent unfair trade practices claim and that plaintiff could not bring a statutory bad faith action claiming liability was reasonably clear when the jury had decided the opposite, so plaintiff's claim was dismissed. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The District Court's assumption that the unfair trade practices claim sought to relitigate the underlying claim and that the issues in both claims were the same was incorrect because the issues were in fact separate. An unfair trade practices claim is considered an independent cause of action. The District Court's reasoning that an unfair trade practices claimant must first establish liability in an underlying claim and that an adverse jury verdict defeats the claim was also erroneous because under 33-18-242, a settlement of the underlying claim is sufficient to allow an unfair trade practices claim, and a defense verdict in the underlying negligence suit was not tantamount to a finding that the insurer did not engage in unfair trade practices. Further, a ruling that a defense verdict provided a reasonable basis defense to a subsequent unfair trade practices claim as a matter of law was also erroneous because insurers would then be encouraged to obtain defense verdicts at any cost to shield themselves from subsequent unfair trade practices claims. Thus, a defense verdict in the underlying negligence claim did not collaterally estop plaintiff from pursuing an unfair trade practices claim. Last, plaintiff's failure to raise the issue of insurer misconduct in a motion under former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), in the underlying negligence case did not preclude pursuit of an unfair trade practices claim because the unfair trade practices claims were not litigated in the underlying case and were not issues that should have been litigated in the negligence suit for personal injuries. Graf v. Cont. W. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 105, 321 M 65, 89 P3d 22 (2004). See also Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834 (2000), and Rausch v. Hogan, 2001 MT 123, 305 M 382, 28 P3d 460 (2001).

Limitation of Action — Workers' Compensation Third Party and Bad Faith Claims: A third-party claimant may not bring an action pursuant to Title 33, ch. 18, commonly known as the Unfair Trade Practices Act, until the underlying claim has been settled or a judgment entered in favor of the claimant on the underlying claim. The statute of limitations on such a claim is 1 year from the date of settlement or entry of judgment on the underlying claim, even though the Act does not define what constitutes an underlying claim. A common-law bad faith claim accrues when: (1) all of the elements of the claim or cause exist or have occurred; (2) the right to maintain an action on the claim or cause is complete; or (3) a court or other agency is authorized to accept jurisdiction of the action. The statute of limitations for a common-law bad faith claim is 3 years and begins to run when the claim or action accrues. The accrual date of a bad faith claim arising out of a separate and independent disputed issue is established by determining whether that particular issue has been ultimately resolved, regardless of the existence or absence of a resolution of other issues within the workers' compensation case. Therefore, for statute of limitations purposes, statutory and common-law bad faith claims against an insurer that are predicated on actions taken in adjusting a workers' compensation claim accrue when the Workers' Compensation Court enters a judgment ordering the insurer to pay for a previously denied benefit but leaves unresolved the ultimate determinations of the extent and duration of the worker's disability. O'Connor v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., 2004 MT 65, 320 M 301, 87 P3d 454 (2004), following Grenz v. Orion Group, Inc., 243 M 486, 795 P2d 444 (1990), Poteat v. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co., 277 M 117, 918 P2d 677 (1996), and Brewington v. Employers Fire Ins. Co., 1999 MT 312, 297 M 243, 992 P2d 237 (1999), and distinguishing Fode v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 221 M 282, 719 P2d 414 (1986).

No Duty of Insurer to Notify Claimant of Limitation on Workers' Compensation Medical Benefits: Wiard's workers' compensation benefits were terminated because of failure to file a medical claim within the 60-month period required in 39-71-704. Wiard contended that the failure of the insurer to notify him of the statutory limit violated this chapter, commonly known as the Unfair Trade Practices Act, and the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The Supreme Court disagreed. The rights and duties of the parties were imposed by the provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act, and nothing in that Act established an affirmative duty on the insurer to inform Wiard of the 60-month limitation on the duration of his medical benefits. Wiard v. Liberty NW. Ins. Corp., 2003 MT 295, 318 M 132, 79 P3d 281 (2003).

Advance Insurance Payment Not Required When Liability Not Reasonably Clear: Plaintiffs' child was injured when run over by a car while sledding. Plaintiffs moved for summary judgment requiring the driver's insurer to advance payment for the child's medical expenses pursuant to this section. The insurer also moved for summary judgment of the issue, contending that an advance was not required because liability had not been clearly established. The District Court granted summary judgment for the insurer, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that an advance is required when liability is reasonably clear, but in this case, there was a conflict in the evidence as to whether the driver or the child was negligent. Because genuine issues of material fact existed regarding negligence and liability, summary judgment on the question of the advance was not required. The District Court was affirmed. Giambra v. Travelers Indem. Co., 2003 MT 289, 318 M 73, 78 P3d 880 (2003), following Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997).

Failure by Insurer to Present Facts to Controvert Testimony That Ongoing Medical Expenses Causally Related to Accident — Declaratory Judgment Proper: In Renville v. Taylor, 2000 MT 217, 301 M 99, 7 P3d 400 (2000), the Supreme Court held that defendant insurer was liable for all expenses related to a collision involving Renville and remanded for a new trial on the issue of damages. Renville then asked the District Court for a declaratory judgment ordering defendant to pay for ongoing medical expenses incurred by Renville subsequent to trial. The District Court denied the request on grounds that factual issues existed regarding Renville's ongoing medical expenses that required resolution by a jury. Renville appealed, asserting that the court failed to follow the law of the case, and the Supreme Court agreed and reversed. Although an insurer is entitled to dispute its obligation to pay medical expenses, there must be a factual basis for doing so. Here, defendant insurer refused to pay Renville's ongoing medical expenses because the expenses were allegedly not causally related to the collision; however, the insurer failed to present any evidence to controvert Renville's expert testimony on causation, choosing instead to rely on testimony from the first trial that had been disregarded by the jury and that was not relevant to the issue of ongoing medical expenses. Thus, the District Court erred in failing to grant Renville's motion for declaratory judgment, and defendant insurer was required to pay Renville's ongoing medical expenses pursuant to Ridley v. Guarantee Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), and the law of the case. Renville v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2003 MT 103, 315 M 295, 69 P3d 217 (2003), followed in Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006).

Failure of Proof of Unfair Trade Practices — Action of Insurer in Determining Proof of Loss: Plaintiffs alleged that their insurer refused to pay for hail damage to their home and sought money damages for mental anguish and emotional distress, punitive damages, costs, and attorney fees. The underlying cause was dismissed with prejudice after the insurer made the payment, so the only remaining claims were for loss of the use of money and the derivative claim seeking punitive damages. The District Court found in favor of the insurer, concluding that there was a failure of proof for the claims under subsections (4) and (6) of this section, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Under 33-18-242, an insurer may not be held liable if the insurer has a reasonable basis in law or in fact for contesting a claim or the amount of a claim. In this case, it was reasonable for the insurer to immediately seek bids for the replacement costs and to seek current bids from contractors following plaintiffs' rejection of a joint appraisal. The insurer's actions were reasonable, and little if any of the delay could be attributed to the insurer. In the absence of evidence from plaintiffs to the contrary, the alleged unfair trade practice was unproved. Nelson v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 2003 MT 101, 315 M 268, 68 P3d 689 (2003).

Material Misrepresentation on Application for Credit Life and Disability Insurance — Denial of Coverage Warranted: Schlemmer applied to the North Central Life Insurance Company (North Central) for credit life and disability insurance but misrepresented his health history. If he had answered correctly on the application, he would have been ineligible for the insurance. Nevertheless, he averred by his signature that he understood the form and that his application statements were true, so the policy was issued. Schlemmer later filed a claim for disability payments. North Central investigated, found that Schlemmer had been treated within the previous 2 years for hypertension, chronic obstructive lung disease, and disease or disorder of the kidneys, contrary to his statements in the application, and denied the claim and refunded Schlemmer's premiums. Schlemmer sued for damages, claiming that the application and underwriting procedures used by North Central violated this section, commonly known as the unfair claims settlement practices law, breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and constituted fraud. Schlemmer also maintained that the District Court erred in failing to rule on whether North Central's agent had knowledge of Schlemmer's condition, which might have created a question of material fact. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's rulings that: (1) Schlemmer's claim of ignorance of the contents of the written application could not prevail because the application language was clear and unambiguous and Schlemmer did not deny signing it; (2) Schlemmer materially misrepresented his health on the application; (3) the material misrepresentation was legally sufficient to allow North Central to deny coverage under the policy; and (4) Schlemmer's argument that North Central's agent knew or should have known about Schlemmer's health was mere speculation insufficient to create an issue of fact to defeat North Central's properly supported motion for summary judgment. Further, the Supreme Court declined to consider Schlemmer's argument that the misrepresentation could not serve as a basis to rescind the policy because he did not apply for benefits until more than 2 years after applying for the insurance, pursuant to 33-22-205, because Schlemmer never raised the issue at the District Court level. Schlemmer v. N. Cent. Life Ins. Co., 2001 MT 256, 307 M 203, 37 P3d 63 (2001).

Incorrect Dismissal of Declaratory Judgment Seeking Payment of Prejudgment Medical Expenses — Ridley and Safeco Clarified: DuBray filed a complaint for a declaratory judgment, asking for a determination that Farmers Insurance Exchange (Farmers) was required to pay DuBray's medical expenses prior to settlement of or judgment on the underlying claim. DuBray also sought prejudgment interest, costs of suit, and compensatory and punitive damages. The District Court found that the complaint was effectively a bad faith action barred by 33-18-242 prior to resolution of the underlying claim against Farmers and dismissed the claim in its entirety for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. DuBray appealed, citing Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834 (2000), wherein the Supreme Court approved declaratory judgment actions as a means for compelling advance payment of medical expenses. Farmers contended that Safeco authorized declaratory judgment actions only for damages that, according to Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), are owed prior to final judgment, that the only damages to which Ridley applied are undisputed medical expenses, and that the District Court should therefore be affirmed. The Supreme Court affirmed Safeco inasmuch as that case does not authorize a declaratory judgment to determine an insurer's liability prior to resolution of the underlying claim, with the exception of damages for which liability is reasonably clear, which are not barred by 33-18-242. Therefore, the District Court correctly dismissed DuBray's claims for pain and discomfort, mental distress, inconvenience, and punitive damages. However, Farmers' liability for medical damages was reasonably clear, so the District Court committed reversible error in dismissing the portion of DuBray's claim that sought payment of medical expenses. The Supreme Court went on to clarify Safeco and Ridley to ensure that those cases not be construed to apply only to medical expenses, because medical expenses are just one of the obligations incurred by victims that mandatory liability insurance laws were designed to eliminate, another being lost wages that are reasonably certain and directly related to an insured's negligence or wrongful act. DuBray v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2001 MT 251, 307 M 134, 36 P3d 897 (2001).

No Duty to Defend or Settle — Res Judicata and Collateral Estoppel: In October 1993, Engstrand had almost all of his fingers amputated while working on a team that was splitting firewood for Little Joe's Tavern, a bar owned by Troutt and her husband. Seven weeks after the occurrence of the accident, Colorado Western Insurance Company (CWIC), the insurance company that issued Troutt's liquor liability insurance, was notified of the accident. CWIC then hired an independent adjuster to investigate the accident. During the investigation, Peggy and Lee Troutt and their attorney stated that only one beer had been consumed by the wood-splitting team before the accident. The investigator was not notified of Lee Troutt's statement that did not attribute the accident to alcohol at that time even though Troutt's attorney possessed a copy of the statement in his file. Engstrand and his wife filed a personal injury suit against Troutt in state court in June 1995. In their complaint, the Engstrands did not mention alcohol at all. However, Little Joe's Tavern bartender the night before the accident stated during her deposition that both Lee Troutt and another member of the team were visibly intoxicated when they left the bar at 2 a.m. the day of the accident. Lee Troutt admitted that it was possible that he had a hangover the day of the accident. Several members of the team were deposed, and they confirmed that a pitcher of beer was consumed during a break in the work at noon, approximately 45 minutes before the accident occurred. At trial, Troutt admitted liability, and the case proceeded to a hearing on damages, in which Troutt did not participate, that resulted in the Montana state court awarding the Engstrands $1,154,262.29. Following the state court judgment, Troutt sued CWIC in federal court seeking a declaration that CWIC's liquor liability policy provided coverage for the judgment obtained by the Engstrands. The Engstrands sued CWIC for the same reason in state court. CWIC removed this second case to federal court, and the two cases were consolidated into a single case. Troutt also alleged that CWIC was guilty of breach of contract and bad faith violations of the Montana Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act of 1973 for failing to investigate fully the Engstrands' claim and failing to provide a defense and indemnification to her. She also sought punitive damages. The District Court also ruled that the liquor insurance policy was not ambiguous, but the policy was broader than the Montana dram shop law, and therefore, after conducting a bench trial and looking at new evidence presented by Troutt, it ruled that the policy covered the amounts that Troutt was obligated to pay as a result of Engstrand's accident. On all other issues, the District Court held in favor of CWIC. Both parties appeal those issues on which they lost before the District Court. Res judicata and collateral estoppel are two different doctrines that are often confused for each other. The Montana Supreme Court has succinctly explained the difference between the two: "The doctrines differ in that res judicata bars the same parties from relitigating the same cause of action, while collateral estoppel bars the party against whom the claim is asserted, or a party in privity with the earlier party, from relitigating issues which have been decided with respect to a different cause of action." Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 991 P2d 915 (Mont. 1999). In this case, res judicata is inapplicable because the doctrine has only a preclusive effect on the parties involved in the state court suit, i.e., the Engstrands and Troutt. Thus, res judicata prevents the Engstrands from bringing another personal injury cause of action based on Terry Engstrand's accident against Troutt. CWIC cannot assert the doctrine of res judicata because it was not a party to the original suit. Similarly, res judicata is inapplicable because the causes of action of the two lawsuits are markedly different: the state court action was a personal injury tort suit; the federal court action is a declaratory relief suit based on an allegedly breached insurance contract. The first two elements of the res judicata test are not present here. Collateral estoppel, also known as issue preclusion, bars the reopening of an issue in a different cause of action that has been litigated and determined in a prior suit. See Holtman v. 4-G's Plumbing & Heating, Inc., 872 P2d 318 (Mont. 1994). The preclusive effect extends to all issues essential to the prior judgment. The alcohol issue was not raised by the parties in their pleadings, nor was it developed at trial or through motion practice. Rather, the state court's findings seem to be based primarily on Troutt's admission of liability. Such admission precludes a determination that the issue was actually litigated on its merits. The result of the collateral estoppel inquiry is that the totality of the circumstances suggest that the issue regarding the alcohol consumption was litigated but was not decided on the merits in the state court proceeding. Therefore, collateral estoppel is not a bar to the litigation of the alcohol consumption question in this case. The state court found Troutt liable to the Engstrands under a set of facts that included alcohol as a causing factor of the accident. The policy issued by CWIC contemplates coverage under this exact set of circumstances and does not bind such coverage to the Montana dram shop law. If CWIC had intended to incorporate the law as the sole arbiter of Troutt's liability, it could have simply inserted a clause to that effect in its policy. Therefore, the plain meaning of CWIC's policy is that all liability, whether based on the law or not, is covered, and because the state court found liability, coverage exists. It is true that the Montana Supreme Court ruled that the insuring language in CWIC's policy was inherently ambiguous; this ruling arrived a few years following the contract made between Troutt and CWIC. Thus, even though the construction stated by the Montana Supreme Court applies to the policy, it would be singular to impose tort liability on CWIC for failing to anticipate the Montana Supreme Court rulings, especially given the fact that the Montana Supreme Court specifically accepted CWIC's construction of the ambiguous language as one of the possible ways that this language can be interpreted. It is irrelevant that CWIC was wrong in its determination that no coverage existed under the policy because at the time that the offer to settle was made, it reasonably concluded that no coverage was possible. Under these circumstances, CWIC did not have a duty to defend Troutt from the Engstrands' suit against her and did not breach its agreement with Troutt by failing to investigate the claim or to settle before trial. Troutt v. Colo. W. Ins. Co. 246 F3d 1150 (2001).

Insurer's Reasonable Explanation for Denial of Claim for Advance Medical Payments and Living Expenses — Injunction and Declaratory Judgment Properly Denied: Ensey was injured in a fall from a ladder while working at a construction site for a drywall company. Following Ensey's request that the company notify its insurer of the claim, the insurer, Colorado Casualty, notified Ensey that it was investigating. About 3 months after the accident, Ensey sent the insurer a demand letter requesting advance medical expenses payments and lost earnings payments, contending that the insurer's liability was reasonably clear because the company had failed to provide Ensey with safe scaffolding equipment. About 2 months later, Ensey was informed by counsel for the insurer that the request for advance payments was denied because liability was not reasonably clear. The insurer's investigation had revealed that there were in fact multiple safety devices available for Ensey's use, but that Ensey personally chose the ladder over the other equipment. About 2 weeks later, Ensey filed a complaint against Colorado Casualty, seeking a declaratory judgment establishing entitlement to the advance payments, an injunction compelling Colorado Casualty to make the payments, and damages. The District Court found that Colorado Casualty had provided a reasonable explanation for denying Ensey's claim and dismissed the suit. Ensey appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Colorado Casualty complied with its duty to provide Ensey with a reasonable explanation for the denial of the claim. The explanation provided a legal and factual basis for the denial and was reasonably prompt. Nothing more was required. Denial of Ensey's request for a preliminary injunction and declaratory judgment was proper. Ensey v. Colo. Cas., 2001 MT 152, 306 M 68, 30 P3d 350 (2001).

Expert Testimony Not Needed on Insurance Agent's Standard of Care in Procuring Requested Insurance: In an insureds' negligence and contract action against an insurance agency for failure to procure requested coverage, an insurance agent testified as to the duties and responsibilities of an insurance agent when asked to procure specific insurance. Expert testimony on the insurance agent's standard of care and breach of the standard was not required. Fillinger v. NW. Agency, Inc., of Great Falls, 283 M 71, 938 P2d 1347, 54 St. Rep. 500 (1997).

Insurance Agent's Failure to Procure Requested Coverage — Duty of Insured to Read Policy and Confirm Requested Coverage: The jury reasonably found that it was not unreasonable for husband and wife to have not read the insurance policy covering their outfitting business and that it was reasonable for them to act in reliance upon the representations of their insurance agent. The insureds did not have an absolute duty to read the policy. Failure to read a policy might amount to contributory negligence, but that is a question for the jury. The husband testified that he asked the agent for a policy that would cover everything, especially if someone were hurt on a horse, and that he was told that it would. He asked the same question for a number of years each time that the policy was renewed and was always given an affirmative answer. The agent testified that the husband frequently asked about and was concerned about "horse rider" coverage. When an accident occurred involving a horse, the agent told the husband that the bills would be paid. However, the insurance company failed to pay the bills, and the insured sued the agent for negligence and breach of contract. Fillinger v. NW. Agency, Inc., of Great Falls, 283 M 71, 938 P2d 1347, 54 St. Rep. 500 (1997).

Insurance Agents Subject to This Law in Procuring Insurance for Insureds: The relationship between insureds and an insurance agency in regard to insurance that the agency procures for insureds clearly involves the business of insurance, and misrepresentations of coverage by an insurance agent of the agency are prohibited trade practices. Fillinger v. NW. Agency, Inc., of Great Falls, 283 M 71, 938 P2d 1347, 54 St. Rep. 500 (1997).

Attorney Letter Constitutes "Claim": When a maintenance worker was injured in a fall from a hospital roof, his attorney in a letter to the hospital's architectural designer requested that the firm have its insurance carrier contact the attorney regarding the worker's "claim". The worker argued that the applicable policy limits were $1 million rather than the $100,000 limit in effect when the attorney's letter was received. Affirming the District Court's decision, the Supreme Court ruled that the attorney letter, written when the policy limits in effect were $100,000, constituted a "claim" for damages under the policy. Herron v. Schutz Foss Architects, 282 M 94, 935 P2d 1104, 54 St. Rep. 258 (1997).

Certified Questions — Settlement or Judgment Not Required as Precondition to Action Against Insurer — Unfair Claims Settlement Practices Action Not Barred by Terms of Policy: In an original proceeding pursuant to former Rule 44, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the Supreme Court responded to two certified questions from the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals and held that an insured need not pursue the underlying claim to the point of settlement or judgment before bringing an action against the insurer under the unfair claims settlement practices statutes codified in Title 33, ch. 18. This was true, notwithstanding a "no action" clause in the insurance policy, because the clause was contrary to public policy. The Supreme Court also held that the insured was not barred by the "no action" clause of the policy from bringing an action under the unfair claims settlement practices statutes when the company did not object to direct settlement between the plaintiff and insured in the underlying action and when the insurer contributed the policy limits to that settlement. Peris v. Safeco Ins. Co., 276 M 486, 916 P2d 780, 53 St. Rep. 481 (1996).

Reversal of Jury Findings Regarding Liability Not Allowed Upon Court Review of Punitive Damage Award: A jury, by special verdict, found that defendants had no reasonable basis in law or fact for contesting plaintiffs' claim for crop damages and awarded plaintiffs punitive damages. Upon review of the damage award, the District Court concluded that defendants had a reasonable basis upon which to deny the claim and modified the damage award. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that because plaintiffs invoked their right to a jury trial, allowing the court to reverse issues of underlying liability previously submitted to and decided by the jury would interfere with the jury as trier of fact deciding the issues. Court review pursuant to 27-1-221(7)(c) must be conducted without contradicting findings of fact made by the jury, and failure to do so constitutes reversible error. Debruycker v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 266 M 294, 880 P2d 819, 51 St. Rep. 835 (1994).

Coverage Properly Denied for Insured Who Claimed He Punched Another Person While Unconscious: Smith punched his babysitter in the face but claimed that she had hit him on the head first and that he was unconscious when he struck her. He pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor assault charge and was ordered to pay medical expenses, which he failed to do. The babysitter sued Smith, and he in turn sued his insurance company, which denied coverage on the basis that the policy denied coverage for injuries caused by intentional acts. The Supreme Court held that despite Smith's claim that he was unconscious from a blow to the head when he struck the babysitter, the conduct of striking her with his fist, by its nature, evinced an intent to injure and coverage was properly denied. Smith v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 264 M 129, 870 P2d 74, 51 St. Rep. 186 (1994).

Defense to Charge of Unfair Claim Settlement — Reasonable Basis for Denial of Claim to Be Determined by Trier of Fact: Shortly after the Deans' house was destroyed by fire, they were charged with arson. Their insurance company refused to settle their claim because of the pending arson charges. After the Deans were acquitted of the criminal charges, the insurance company paid them the policy limits. Later, the Deans filed an action in United States District Court alleging a number of violations of this section. The United States District Court certified a question to the Montana Supreme Court, asking whether the insurance company's refusal to pay the claim while the arson charges were pending constituted a "reasonable basis in law or fact", under 33-18-242, as a defense to the action. Citing Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141, 50 St. Rep. 1068 (1993), the Supreme Court held that reasonableness was a question of fact for the trier of fact to decide. Dean v. Austin Mut. Ins. Co., 263 M 386, 869 P2d 256, 51 St. Rep 102 (1994), followed in Debruycker v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 266 M 294, 880 P2d 819, 51 St. Rep. 835 (1994).

Individuals as Well as Insurers Liable for Unfair Trade Practices: The defendant in a personal injury case filed a counterclaim against the plaintiffs, alleging that their negligence was the cause of the automobile accident involving the parties. Subsequently, in his deposition, the defendant admitted that he had been intoxicated at the time of the accident, that he had been driving negligently, and that the plaintiffs had not been negligent. The plaintiffs sought summary judgment to dismiss the defendant's counterclaims, but prior to the hearing, the defendant voluntarily dismissed his counterclaims. The plaintiffs then sought damages from the insurer and the agent for bad faith in violation of the insurer's statutory duty to settle a claim when liability becomes reasonably clear. The agent argued that 33-18-242 limits liability for unfair trade practices to insurers. The Supreme Court held that that portion of Klaudt v. Flink, 202 M 247, 658 P2d 1065 (1983), holding that this section did afford a plaintiff a common-law cause of action against individuals, had never been reversed or modified. The Supreme Court further held that the statutory cause of action provided for in 33-18-242 and the different standard of proof provided for by the statute apply only to insurers, while the common-law cause of action and standard of proof provided for by this section apply to insurers and individuals. O'Fallon v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 260 M 233, 859 P2d 1008, 50 St. Rep. 1022 (1993), followed in Debruycker v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 266 M 294, 880 P2d 819, 51 St. Rep. 835 (1994), in which the Supreme Court acknowledged the different standards of proof for claims against individuals and insurers, but nevertheless reversed a lower court decision striking a jury punitive damage award against an individual when the common-law standing of the party was not raised as an issue prior to appeal.

Excess Insurer's Action Against Primary Insurer Based Upon Subrogation and Not Independent Right — Dismissal of Other Action — No Subrogation: St. Paul's insured, Lynn, and Allstate's insured, Glassing, were involved in a car accident. After judgment against Glassing, St. Paul paid Lynn pursuant to the underinsured motorist provision of its policy and then sought recovery itself against Allstate based on a right of equitable subrogation and Allstate's failure to settle Lynn's claim. The Supreme Court held that St. Paul could not act as a third-party claimant and bring an action directly against Allstate based upon subrogation and Allstate's failure as a primary insurer to pay its policy limits to Lynn. The Supreme Court noted that there is no independent duty of Allstate to pay the policy amount to St. Paul, that duty depends only upon subrogation of the rights of Lynn, and that at the time of the action, Lynn had no right against Allstate because of a stipulation dismissing an action in federal District Court against Allstate. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 257 M 47, 847 P2d 705, 50 St. Rep. 154 (1993), followed in Nimmick v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 270 M 315, 891 P2d 1154, 52 St. Rep. 208 (1995).

No Claim Submitted — Act Inapplicable: This section does not apply to a case in which a claim is never submitted to an insurer. McNeil v. Currie, 253 M 9, 830 P2d 1241, 49 St. Rep. 312 (1992).

Contract Payments Made — Summary Judgment Proper: Kasetas asserted unfair claims settlement practices, but summary judgment on the issue was not error given Kasetas' admission that proper payments were made under the terms of the contract. Kaseta v. NW. Agency of Great Falls, 252 M 135, 827 P2d 804, 49 St. Rep. 183 (1992).

Summary Judgment Held Improper on Issue of Bad Faith: In an earlier action between the parties, the Supreme Court had reversed the lower court and ruled that the plaintiff had made a claim against the insurance company in a timely fashion. In a second trial on the issue of bad faith, the lower court granted the insurance company's summary judgment motion on the basis that if a previous court had ruled that there was no coverage, although reversed on appeal, then as a matter of law there were good faith arguments supporting the insurance company's denial. The lower court reasoned that if one judge could find in favor of no coverage, then the defendant had demonstrated that it had denied coverage in good faith and summary judgment was proper. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court, holding that questions of fact did exist with respect to alleged lack of good faith on the part of the defendant, regardless of any earlier rulings. Walker v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 241 M 256, 786 P2d 1157, 47 St. Rep. 208 (1990).

Correspondence Between Insurer and Attorneys Privileged: Correspondence between an insurer and its attorneys relating to litigation that occurred after litigation was begun is privileged from disclosure in a bad faith claim filed by the insured against the insurer after resolution of the underlying insurance claim. Unless there is a conflict of interest, the attorneys hired by the insurer to defend its insured also represent the insurer, and therefore communications between the attorneys and insurer are protected by the common-law attorney-client privilege that has been codified in 26-1-803. Adopting the reasoning of a recent federal case, Admiral Ins. v. U.S. District Court, 881 F2d 1486 (9th Cir. 1989), which enumerated the essential elements of the privilege, the Supreme Court held that although a showing of need may overcome the immunity given to an attorney work product, a similar showing cannot be invoked to overcome the attorney-client privilege. State ex rel. USF&G Co. v. District Court, 240 M 5, 783 P2d 911, 46 St. Rep. 1896 (1989), followed in Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 261 M 91, 861 P2d 895, 50 St. Rep. 1210 (1993).

Bad Faith Litigation — Attorney-Client Privilege: In interpreting Montana state law to determine the scope of protection afforded by the attorney-client privilege in an action for bad faith by an insured against an insurer, the District Court found that letters written to the insurer by the insurer's attorney concerning the underlying insurance claim are protected by the attorney-client privilege and work product doctrine codified in this state under 26-1-803. The court rejected plaintiff's contention that the documents were not protected by the privilege because the attorney represented only the insured, not the insurer, in the underlying claim and therefore his communications with the insurer were not communications between an attorney and his client. The attorney was acting in a dual capacity as attorney for both the insurer and insured, which is recognized as proper as long as a conflict of interest does not arise. The court further determined that documents clearly prepared in the ordinary course of the insurer's business, and not for the purpose of this litigation, are discoverable because they are not protected by the work product doctrine. Baker v. CNA Ins. Co., 45 St. Rep. 2400 (D.C. Mont. 1988) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Discovery of "Bad Faith" Litigation in Other Jurisdictions: In a federal action for bad faith by an insured against an insurer based upon diversity jurisdiction, the District Court held that information concerning similar "bad faith" litigation against the insurer in other jurisdictions is discoverable if the discovering party establishes to the court's satisfaction that the obligations imposed on the insurer by the other jurisdiction are sufficiently similar to Montana law to warrant a conclusion that the information could reasonably be expected to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Baker v. CNA Ins. Co., 45 St. Rep. 2400 (D.C. Mont. 1988) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Duty to Investigate — No Duty to Defend Absent Applicable Coverage: Insurers have the duty to investigate claims and coverage promptly, and not only covered claims. However, when the allegations of a complaint demonstrate that no coverage exists, an insurer has no duty to indemnify or defend. Daly Ditches Irrigation District v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 234 M 537, 764 P2d 1276, 45 St. Rep. 2112 (1988), citing McClear v. St. Paul Ins. Co., 158 M 452, 493 P2d 331 (1972). McClear was followed in Brabeck v. Employers Mut. Cas. Co., 2000 MT 373, 303 M 468, 16 P3d 355, 57 St. Rep. 1596 (2000).

Award of Attorney Fees in Declaratory Judgment Insurance Action — Distinction Between Third-Party Claimant and Insured: As a general rule, an insured is not entitled to recover attorney fees and expenses incurred in defending a declaratory judgment action brought by an insurer to determine the existence of coverage under a liability insurance policy. However, recovery is appropriate where it is ultimately determined by the court that the insurer was not acting in good faith in contesting coverage and instituting declaratory judgment proceedings. A third-party claimant is not entitled to recover attorney fees incurred in a declaratory judgment proceeding, even if the claimant arguably falls within the policy definition of "insured". Iowa Mut. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 689 F. Supp. 1028, 45 St. Rep. 1361 (D.C. Mont. 1988).

Applicability to Licensed Insurance Business That Issues Suretyship Contract: A business entity licensed under Montana law to transact the business of insurance, which issues as part of its business a contract of suretyship guaranteeing the performance of an underlying contract in Montana, is transacting a class of insurance business under Montana law and is subject to statutes regarding unfair claims settlement practices as set out in Title 33, ch. 18, part 2. The entity is liable in a tort action for violations of 33-18-201 for damages beyond the express terms of the suretyship contract. K-W Indus. v. Nat'l Surety Corp., 231 M 461, 754 P2d 502, 45 St. Rep. 762 (1988).

Valid Release of Insurance Claims as Binding: Plaintiff injured in an automobile accident received $4,362.85 for medical expenses, lost wages, car rental costs, headaches, and inconvenience. In return for the settlement payments, the adjuster obtained a general liability release discharging the insurance company "from all claims, demands, damages, actions, causes of action or suits of any kind or nature whatsoever . . . [for] all injuries, known or unknown". Plaintiff sent a thank you note to the adjuster to express her pleasure with the "settlement and prompt service" but also retained an attorney on the case who attempted to obtain rescission of the release after receiving a copy of plaintiff's medical report. Rescission was denied upon a finding that plaintiff executed a valid release of all claims and that the terms of the agreement and release were clear and unambiguous. Plaintiff was bound by the settlement terms. Hanson v. Oljar, 231 M 272, 752 P2d 187, 45 St. Rep. 602 (1988).

No Cause of Action by Third Party Claimants for Unfair Claims Settlement Practices: Subsection (7) of 33-18-201, disallowing compulsion of insureds to institute litigation, does not protect third party claimants who are not insured by the defendant insurance company. Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 230 M 63, 748 P2d 937, 45 St. Rep. 18 (1988), distinguishing Klaudt v. Flink, 202 M 247, 658 P2d 1065, 40 St. Rep. 64 (1983).

FELA, Not State Statutory Law, as Providing Remedy for Common Law Claims: Claimant sought compensation from a Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) self-insurer for an alleged breach of the common law duty of good faith and fair dealing. Claimant argued that because FELA did not specifically address the problem of unfair claims settlement practices, the duties imposed by Montana statutory and common law were not preempted by FELA and should apply. The federal District Court found no authority for this novel proposition in holding that the rights and duties of an employee and employer subject to FELA depend on the terms of the Act itself and on common law as interpreted by the federal courts; therefore, FELA presents the exclusive remedy in all actions falling within the ambit of the Act to the exclusion of state statutory and common law. Toscano v. Burlington N. RR Co., 678 F. Supp. 1477, 45 St. Rep. 367 (D.C. Mont. 1987).

Litigation Provision Inapplicable to Third-Party Claimants: Subsection (7) of this section, which relates to compelling insureds to institute litigation by offering less than amounts ultimately recovered, does not apply to or protect third-party claimants. Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 44 St. Rep. 508 (1987), opinion withdrawn and replaced in 230 M 63, 748 P2d 937, 45 St. Rep. 18 (1988).

Reliance on Insurance Coverage — Elements of Promissory Estoppel Met: Where an insurance company treated son as an insured when it paid prior medical bills and when it represented to a medical center that he was insured, these acts constituted a promise to pay medical bills. Father and son were injured by their reliance on the promise when the company later refused coverage of medical center bills. As reliance was reasonable and foreseeable, these facts constituted ample evidence for a jury finding of promissory estoppel. Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115, 43 St. Rep. 2243 (1986).

Violation of Unfair Claims Settlement Practices — Three-Year Statute of Limitations: A claim for violation of the unfair claims settlement practices statute arises out of a statutory scheme but consists of a separate cause of action in tort. Therefore, the 3-year Statute of Limitations applies. Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115, 43 St. Rep. 2243 (1986).

Improper Denial of Malpractice Insurance — Claim Filed Within Policy Period: The Internal Revenue Service (I.R.S.) notified Walker that attorney Larson had underestimated the amount of estate tax owed by the estate. Larson's insurance company denied coverage, stating that Larson had failed to extend coverage to include claims reported after the policy expiration date. Walker filed malpractice, bad faith, and unfair trade practice claims against Larson. The District Court denied both Larson's and the insurance company's motions to dismiss and subsequently granted judgment in favor of the company. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, stating that under the authority of Link v. Cont. Cas. Co., 470 F2d 1133 (9th Cir. 1972), the ambiguity surrounding the term "claim" would be construed against the insurer. Walker had filed her claim against Larson within the policy period. Walker v. Larson, 223 M 333, 727 P2d 1321, 43 St. Rep. 1765 (1986).

Bad Faith Claim Suspended Until Liability Determined: Plaintiff sued defendant, insurer of another driver, following a three-car accident. Defendant denied any liability on the part of its insured and refused to pay any part of plaintiff's claim. Plaintiff then filed a bad faith action against defendant. The District Court granted summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case. The court overruled Klaudt v. Flink, 202 M 247, 658 P2d 1065, 40 St. Rep. 64 (1983), to the extent that Klaudt allowed a bad faith claim to be pursued although liability for an accident had not been determined. The court noted several problems in this procedure and held that all proceedings in a bad faith case alleging violations of the insurance laws which require a showing that liability be reasonably clear are suspended until the liability issues of the underlying case are determined by judgment or settlement. The bad faith case may be filed to toll the Statute of Limitations, but no discovery may be engaged. A favorable District Court judgment for the plaintiff is sufficient to trigger discovery in the bad faith case. Fode v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 221 M 282, 719 P2d 414, 43 St. Rep. 814 (1986), followed in In re Petition of Johnson, 224 M 337, 728 P2d 1354, 43 St. Rep. 2232 (1986), and distinguished in Peris v. Safeco Ins. Co., 276 M 486, 916 P2d 780, 53 St. Rep. 481 (1996).

No Reference to Unfair Claim Settlement Practices Statute — Remand — Suspension of Proceedings Pending Determination of Liability: Appellant Fode asked the Supreme Court to recognize the common-law duty of good faith and fair dealing imposed by 28-1-201 and 28-1-203 without reference to 33-18-201, the unfair claim settlement practices statute. In remanding the case, the court found that Fode's allegations contained in his complaint should be presented to the District Court to determine whether a cause of action existed under 33-18-201; however, all proceedings were suspended until liability was determined in the underlying case. Fode v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 221 M 282, 719 P2d 414, 43 St. Rep. 814 (1986).

Venue for Insurer Bad Faith Tort — County Where Investigation and Negotiation Transpired: In action for bad faith against insurer and its claims representative under 33-18-201, defendants moved for change of venue from Flathead County to Cascade County. Defendants contended that Cascade County was proper venue since the claims representative maintained an office and accomplished all work and decisions there. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's denial of the motion, finding that the defendant's duty to investigate and negotiate could have been realistically performed only in Flathead County where the plaintiff's farm and the provider of defective potting soil were located. Since venue in Flathead County was proper for the insurer, it was also proper for the claims representative who resided in Cascade County. Streich & Associates, Inc. v. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co., 221 M 209, 717 P2d 1101, 43 St. Rep. 752 (1986).

Breach of Covenant of Good Faith in Conducting Insurance Claim: In a foreclosure action, the insured, Britton, cross-claimed against Farmers Insurance Group (FIG) for the full amount of coverage provided by FIG's policy and for further compensatory and punitive damages by reason of "bad faith". FIG responded to the foreclosure action by setting up as a cross-claim against Britton its right under its partial assignment of mortgage and requesting foreclosure against Britton. FIG further defended against Britton's cross-claim by alleging that Britton had intentionally set the fire, had been guilty of fraud with respect to his interest in the property, and had not submitted a proper proof of loss. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that prior to filing its answer to Britton's cross-claim, FIG neither rejected Britton's proof of loss nor informed him in writing or otherwise of their contention of arson. Also, FIG's evidence regarding Britton's involvement in setting the fire was circumstantial, and there was no evidence of potential financial gain for Britton from the policy proceeds. The jury decision that FIG breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in conducting the claim was upheld. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Verbatim Reading of Unfair Claim Settlement Practices as Jury Instruction — Harmless Error: An insurer claimed the District Court erred in including in its charge to the jury a verbatim reproduction of the 14 proscribed unfair claim settlement practices contained in 33-18-201, contending that a majority of the practices had no applicability to this case. On appeal, the Supreme Court found there was at least an arguable basis for submission to the jury of 12 of the 14 practices enumerated, and that inclusion of the two inapplicable practices in the jury instruction was harmless and not prejudicial. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Concealment of Material Facts — Bad Faith: In an action against his insurance company for failure to settle a third-party claim within policy limits, plaintiff offered and the trial court gave an instruction stating that an insurer is liable for bad faith if it intentionally conceals material facts within its knowledge and not known by the insured. Defendant contended it was error to give the instruction. On appeal, the Supreme Court stated that the duty of a fiduciary to his beneficiary is no less than that of a trustee. The fiduciary, as a trustee, is bound to act in the highest good faith toward his beneficiary and may not obtain any advantage over the latter by the slightest misrepresentation, concealment, threat, or adverse pressure of any kind. It was therefore not error to inform the jury that an insurance company which "intentionally" conceals material facts within its knowledge and not known to the insured may be found to be acting in bad faith. The concealed facts must be material to the subject of the trust or duty of the fiduciary as the instruction stated. The judgment was affirmed. Gibson v. W. Fire Ins. Co., 210 M 267, 682 P2d 725, 41 St. Rep. 1048 (1984).

Declaratory Judgment — May Preclude Charge of Bad Faith: Kevin Cumiskey leased a restaurant from Elizabeth Bradley. The lease provided Cumiskey could make improvements to the premises, but he was to insure Bradley's interests. Cumiskey's father and mother operated the restaurant after it was incorporated. The restaurant was damaged by fire that appeared to be intentionally set. Plaintiff brought suit for a declaratory judgment to determine if Kevin Cumiskey was the recipient of policy proceeds, to determine rights and relationships of parties, and to subrogate any claim paid by plaintiff from the father who was suspected of the arson. Cumiskey counterclaimed for bad faith on the insurer's part. The District Court granted the insurer summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that a declaratory judgment action may be brought for the purpose of settling and affording relief from uncertainty and insecurity with respect to rights, status, and other legal relations. In a proper case, an insurer may use a declaratory judgment to obtain a determination of the validity, continuance, or coverage of an insurance policy; a determination of the extent of liability; or a determination of the insurer's duties under the policy. The action was proper, and the summary judgment on the counterclaim was properly awarded. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Cumiskey, 204 M 350, 665 P2d 223, 40 St. Rep. 891 (1983).

Insurers' Duty to Act in Good Faith Toward Insured: Insurance companies have a duty, independent of contract and statutes, to act in good faith with their insureds. Any statements in Montana Supreme Court cases that may be or appear to be in conflict with this rule are to that extent expressly overruled. Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 M 1, 655 P2d 970, 39 St. Rep. 2283 (1982), followed in Stephens v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 258 M 142, 852 P2d 565, 50 St. Rep. 467 (1993).

DUTY TO DEFEND

Presence of Insurance Adjuster Rather Than Attorney at Prelitigation Mediation Conference Not Violative of Insurer's Duty to Defend: An insurer sent an insurance adjuster rather than an attorney to a prelitigation mediation conference. Defendant contended that this violated the insurer's statutory duty to defend under the policy. The District Court held that the insurer met its obligation by actively participating in the mediation, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court noted that the duty to defend encompasses functions that can only be fulfilled by a licensed attorney, but that insurance adjusters play a vital role in the resolution of claims prior to the initiation of litigation and further noted that public policy encourages settlements and avoiding unnecessary litigation. Requiring that counsel be retained for informal settlement conferences could hinder the negotiation process and contravene the policy of encouraging out-of-court settlements. The mediation was not part of any judicial proceeding, and the insurer did not violate its duty to defend by sending an insurance adjuster to mediation. The District Court was affirmed. Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Johnson, 2009 MT 442, 354 M 192, 224 P3d 613 (2009).

Duty to Defend — "Bodily Injury" — "Occurrence": In a federal action based upon diversity jurisdiction in which an insurer sought a declaration of the scope of coverage under an insurance policy, the District Court held that the policy included coverage for "bodily injury". The insured's complaint alleges she suffered such injury. Consequently, the insurer has a duty to defend because the complaint alleges facts that, if proven, would result in coverage. It is the insured's claim that determines the insurer's duty to defend and not whether the injured party can prove an action against the insured for damages. The District Court held that the term "occurrence" as defined in the policy is unambiguous and includes unintended bodily injury, although the insured's operative conduct was intentional. Mut. Serv. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Co-op Supply, Inc. of Dillon, 699 F. Supp. 1438, 45 St. Rep. 2416 (D.C. Mont. 1988).

Scope of Coverage — "Property Damage": In a federal action for wrongful discharge based upon diversity jurisdiction in which an insurer sought a declaration of the scope of coverage under an insurance policy, the District Court held that the term "property damage" that included only damage to "tangible property" does not include loss of past and future salary, loss of health benefits, and other benefits of employment because those are intangible economic losses. Mut. Serv. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Co-op Supply, Inc. of Dillon, 699 F. Supp. 1438, 45 St. Rep. 2416 (D.C. Mont. 1988).

Umbrella Policy — Duty to Defend: In a federal action for wrongful discharge based upon diversity jurisdiction in which an insurer sought a declaration of the scope of coverage under an umbrella insurance policy, the District Court held that the insured's allegations in her complaint of "bodily injury" fall within the scope of coverage under the "personal injury" portion of the policy and therefore create a duty to defend. Mut. Serv. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Co-op Supply, Inc. of Dillon, 699 F. Supp. 1438, 45 St. Rep. 2416 (D.C. Mont. 1988).

Discharge From Employment — Injury to Be Expected — Intentional Conduct Exclusion Applied: Employee claimed he was intentionally fired for refusing to violate Montana law, resulting in emotional and mental injury. The employer tendered the suit to National Surety Corporation, which refused to defend on grounds that the policy did not provide coverage for an occurrence of this sort. The District Court agreed, and the Supreme Court affirmed on the basis that the claimed injury fell outside the definition of "occurrence". Although an intentional act may constitute an occurrence when the alleged injury was not the expected or intended result of the conduct, here there was no injury alleged that could not be expected to flow from the termination. Therefore, the intentional conduct exclusion was properly applied. Daly Ditches Irrigation District v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 234 M 537, 764 P2d 1276, 45 St. Rep. 2112 (1988), distinguishing Lindsay Drilling v. USF&G, 208 M 91, 676 P2d 203 (1984); Millers Mut. Ins. Co. v. Strainer, 204 M 162, 663 P2d 338 (1983); and NW. Cas. Co. v. Phelan, 182 M 448, 597 P2d 720 (1979). See also Mary & Alice Ford Nursing Home v. Fireman's Ins., 446 N.Y.S.2d 599 (1982), and Commercial Union Ins. Co. v. Superior Court, 242 Cal. Rptr. 454, 196 Cal. App. 3d 1205 (1987).

Duty to Investigate — No Duty to Defend Absent Applicable Coverage: Insurers have the duty to investigate claims and coverage promptly, and not only covered claims. However, when the allegations of a complaint demonstrate that no coverage exists, an insurer has no duty to indemnify or defend. Daly Ditches Irrigation District v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 234 M 537, 764 P2d 1276, 45 St. Rep. 2112 (1988), citing McClear v. St. Paul Ins. Co., 158 M 452, 493 P2d 331 (1972). McClear was followed in Brabeck v. Employers Mut. Cas. Co., 2000 MT 373, 303 M 468, 16 P3d 355, 57 St. Rep. 1596 (2000).

Insurance Estoppel Case — General Rule: In affirming a District Court ruling that Safeco Insurance Company was estopped to deny coverage as a matter of law, the Supreme Court adopted the general rule in an insurance estoppel case set forth in 14 Couch, Insurance 2d, 51.85 (2d ed. 1982), as follows: "Where an insurer, without reservation and with actual or presumed knowledge, assumes the exclusive control of the defense of claims against the insured, it cannot thereafter withdraw and deny liability under the policy on the ground of noncoverage, prejudice to the insured by virtue of the insurer's assumption of the defense being, in this situation, conclusively presumed . . . the loss of the right of the insured to control and manage the case is itself prejudicial." The court further noted the requirement in 33-18-201 that the insurer promptly provide a reasonable explanation of the basis in the insurance policy in relation to the facts or applicable law for denial of a claim. Finally, the court cited a similar decision in Transamerica Ins. Group v. Chubb & Son, Inc., 554 P2d 1080 (Wash. 1976), where insureds were defended without reservation of rights for 10 months before the insurance company withdrew from the case, noting that in that case the Washington Court found a presumption of prejudice and granted summary judgment. Safeco Ins. Co. v. Ellinghouse, 223 M 239, 725 P2d 217, 43 St. Rep. 1689 (1986), distinguished in Portal Pipe Line Co. v. Stonewall Ins. Co., 256 M 211, 845 P2d 746, 50 St. Rep. 30 (1993).

Business Pursuits — Steer-Roping Contest: Insured's policy on his ranch excluded business pursuits other than, among other things, farming. For 3 years he held three or four steer-roping contests a year in an arena he built. Nonprofessionals paid a fee and there was prize money, with insured keeping some of the fee money. Insured's own testimony showed he was regularly engaged in the contests for profit and thus was engaged in a business pursuit excluded from policy coverage. A summary judgment for insurer was therefore proper in insured's suit for failure to defend insured and pay an injured steer roper because there was no issue of material fact. Heggen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 220 M 398, 715 P2d 1060, 43 St. Rep. 475 (1986).

No Duty to Defend if No Coverage Under Policy: The insured's liability policy includes coverage for accidental occurrences but not for damage that is intentional or expected. The damage for which the insured claims coverage was expected and thus is not covered by the terms of the policy. The insurer has no duty to defend the insured if there is no liability to the insured under the policy provisions. USF&G v. Rae Volunteer Fire Co., 212 M 450, 688 P2d 1246, 41 St. Rep. 1857 (1984), followed in Burns v. Underwriters Adjusting Co., 234 M 508, 765 P2d 712, 45 St. Rep. 2089 (1988), distinguishing NW. Nat'l Cas. Co. v. Phalen, 182 M 448, 597 P2d 720 (1979). See also Grimsrud v. Hagel, 2005 MT 194, 328 M 142, 119 P3d 47 (2005).

Breach by Refusal to Defend: Insured made repeated requests of the insurer to assume the defense in a wrongful death action, but the insurer refused to do so or failed to respond. The insured was forced to retain counsel for the wrongful death action and a declaratory judgment action which culminated in a finding that the insurer was liable for coverage. The insurer's refusal to defend constituted a breach of contract rendering it liable for defense costs. Truck Ins. Exch. v. Woldstad, 212 M 418, 687 P2d 1022, 41 St. Rep. 1750 (1984).

Duty to Defend — Intentional Versus Negligent Damage — Covered Occurrence: Plaintiff was retained to drill test holes on placer claims. The claim owners refused to pay plaintiff, causing plaintiff to foreclose on a mechanics' lien. The claim owners then counterclaimed, alleging plaintiff had intentionally or negligently salted the test results. Plaintiff tendered defense of the counterclaim to his insurer, the defendant. Defendant refused to defend, contending the allegations of the counterclaim were not covered by the insurance policy. The policy excluded from coverage damage "intended from the standpoint of the insured". The Supreme Court held that if the salting was done by third parties as a result of plaintiff's negligence, the action was covered by the policy. The drilling expense and inherent production costs established an intrinsic value in the core samples. There was a tangible property loss within the policy's coverage. The counterclaim set forth a covered "occurrence" as defined in the policy, and defendant was obliged to defend the counterclaim. Lindsay Drilling v. USF&G, 208 M 91, 676 P2d 203, 41 St. Rep. 193 (1984), distinguished in Portal Pipe Line Co. v. Stonewall Ins. Co., 256 M 211, 845 P2d 746, 50 St. Rep. 30 (1993).

Liability for Failure to Defend Suit Against Insured: Adjoining landowner sued insured for interference with his easement rights, title insurance companies refused to defend, insured hired his own counsel, the suit was settled, and adjoining landowner again sued insured when insured refused to abide by the settlement. The insurers again refused to defend. The policy obligated insurers to defend any litigation founded upon a defect, lien, encumbrance, or other matter insured against. Insurers had failed to disclose and insure against the easements, though they were contained in the title records. The insurers acted in bad faith in refusing to defend the first suit but not in refusing to defend the second suit, since it arose from insureds' refusal to abide by the settlement in the first suit. Insurers were liable to insured for his costs in defending the first suit, and punitive damages could be imposed for failure to defend. Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 M 1, 655 P2d 970, 39 St. Rep. 2283 (1982).

DUTY TO SETTLE

Summary Judgment Improper Given Question of Insurer's Failure to Act in Good Faith in Settling Claim: Plaintiffs moved for summary judgment on the issue of whether defendant insurer violated the statutory duty in 33-18-201 to act in good faith to effectuate prompt settlement of plaintiffs' claim. Although the record contained little evidence favorable to defendant, the Supreme Court noted that the insurer did make an affirmative effort, following an earlier suit regarding liability to pay plaintiffs' claims, to ensure that plaintiffs' future claims would not be wrongfully denied by placing a note to that effect in plaintiffs' file. The insurer also made a remedial effort to pay plaintiffs' claim just over 2 months following the wrongful denial. Given these circumstances, the issue of breach of the duty to act in good faith was a question of fact for a jury, rather than an issue appropriate for summary judgment based on defendant's liability as a matter of law, and the District Court correctly denied plaintiffs' motion. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008).

Admissibility of Documents Held by Insurer When Adjusting Claim — Hearsay Exception Inapplicable: Plaintiffs asserted that defendant insurance company committed unfair trade practices in settling plaintiffs' claim against two insured doctors for malpractice. At trial, the District Court refused to admit as hearsay correspondence written to the insurer by plaintiffs' counsel during settlement negotiations, allowing the insurer to suggest that plaintiffs did not want or try to settle the malpractice claim. The Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion and committed reversible error by not admitting the correspondence. The unfair trade practices claims tested the propriety of actions taken or not taken by the insurer in light of information possessed by the insurer at the time that the underlying malpractice claim was adjusted, so the correspondence was not merely testimonial evidence subject to a hearsay objection in the absence of the author. Thus, the insurer could not block admission of documents held when adjusting the claim. Peterson v. The Doctors' Co., 2007 MT 264, 339 M 354, 170 P3d 459 (2007), followed in Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008).

Assessment of Reasonableness Question of Law — Summary Judgment for Insurer Appropriate: Redies sued the Attorneys Liability Protection Society (ALPS) for allegedly engaging in unfair trade practices by failing to promptly settle a legal malpractice suit against one of the ALPS's insureds, for alleged tortious breach of statutory duties, and for breach of implied duty of good faith and fair dealing. At the time that the ALPS refused to settle, Montana law did not unequivocally recognize a professional duty running from a lawyer for a conservator to a nonclient beneficiary, such as Redies, although a subsequent Supreme Court case signaled that an attorney may owe a duty to nonclients in some contexts. The District Court granted summary judgment, and the Supreme Court upheld. The Supreme Court found that the ALPS had a reasonable basis in law for contesting Redies' claims at the time that the decision was made. The court clarified that although the assessment of reasonableness generally is within the province of the jury or factfinder, reasonableness is a question of law for the court to determine when it depends entirely on interpreting relevant legal precedents and evaluating the insurer's proffered defense under those precedents. Redies v. Attorneys Liability Protection Soc'y, 2007 MT 9, 335 M 233, 150 P3d 930 (2007), distinguished in Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

Insurer Required to Pay Undisputed Medical Coverage Without Settlement Agreement When Liability Reasonably Clear — No Bad Faith Claim for Pre-Watters Conditioned Settlement Offer: Defendant insurer offered to pay plaintiffs the policy limit of $1 million in exchange for a full release of claims against the insureds. Plaintiffs refused to provide a release, the case went to trial, and plaintiffs were awarded more than $3 million. Plaintiffs then counterclaimed against the insurer, claiming that refusal to pay the undisputed medical claims without a release violated subsections (6) and (13) of this section. The Supreme Court noted that the purpose of 33-18-201 is to ensure prompt payment of damages for which an insurer is clearly obligated. Thus, pursuant to Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), and Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626 (2000), the insurer had a duty to pay plaintiffs' undisputed medical expenses up to the limits of its coverage and without the benefit of a settlement agreement. Nevertheless, because the insurer made its settlement offer in 1998, more than 2 years prior to the Watters decision, the insurer had an arguably reasonable basis under 33-18-242 for asserting that it was entitled to condition payment of policy limits on plaintiffs' provision of a release of claims, so the insurer was not liable for acting in bad faith in violation of this section. Shilhanek v. D-2 Trucking, Inc., 2003 MT 122, 315 M 519, 70 P3d 721 (2003), overruling Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191 (1992), and overruling Watters to the extent that Watters implies that an insurer's obligation under Ridley is limited to the minimum coverage required by the Motor Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act.

Material Question Regarding Insurer's Duty to Investigate Claim Information — Summary Judgment Improper: Plaintiffs asserted that defendant insurer violated subsection (4) of this section by declining to investigate the accident or plaintiffs' injury claims and make advance payments to cover plaintiffs' medical expenses. The District Court determined that because the insurer had attempted to discover the amount of plaintiffs' outstanding medical expenses and had forwarded a check for $5,000 to cover outstanding expenses, which was rejected by plaintiffs, summary judgment for the insurer was appropriate. The Supreme Court reversed. A genuine issue of fact remained regarding whether the insurer conducted a reasonable investigation, so the issue was not properly resolved with summary judgment. Shilhanek v. D-2 Trucking, Inc., 2003 MT 122, 315 M 519, 70 P3d 721 (2003).

No Liability Per Se for Paying Mandatory Minimum Policy Limits — Avoiding Liability Through Coerced Economic Necessity: Guaranty National Insurance Co. (Guaranty) provided a minimum motor vehicle liability policy for Moore, who was clearly liable for injuring the Watterses in a car accident. Guaranty offered to settle the Watterses' claim to the extent of the policy coverage, but not without an absolute release of all liability. Guaranty argued that without a full release, it would be subject to a bad faith claim by Moore for placing the interests of a third-party claimant above those of its insured to whom it owed a fiduciary duty. The Supreme Court noted that under 33-18-242, an insured, but not a third-party claimant, is prohibited from bringing a bad faith action in connection with the handling of a claim. In purchasing the minimum required statutory coverage, Moore could not have reasonably expected that Guaranty would be obligated to provide greater coverage than that purchased by demanding a full liability release as a condition of paying the limits of the minimum coverage. When the monetary consequences of a person's tortious conduct undisputedly exceed policy limits and liability is clear, the only incentive for an injured third-party claimant to settle for policy limits and provide the insured with an absolute release from liability is some form of coerced economic necessity. Compelling an innocent third party to proceed to trial to recoup that which is already owed is inconsistent with public policy to encourage settlement and avoid unnecessary litigation. Guaranty would not have been exposed to per se liability for bad faith from Moore by paying the policy limits. Thus, when liability resulting from an automobile accident is reasonably clear and a third-party claimant's damages undisputedly exceed mandatory minimum policy limits pursuant to 61-6-103, the prompt, fair, and equitable settlement of the claims cannot be forestalled by an insurer based on an illusory bad faith or breach of contract claim that an insured may bring, and to refuse payment based on such an unfounded potential liability is itself a deceptive practice within the meaning of this section. Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626, 57 St. Rep. 588 (2000), following Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997).

Purpose of Mandatory Liability Insurance Law — Absolute Liability of Insurer Not Applicable to Coverage in Excess of Statutory Minimum: The mandatory liability insurance law seeks to protect members of the general public who are innocent victims of automobile accidents and was enacted for the benefit of the public, rather than for the benefit of the insured. The liability of an insurance carrier with respect to motor vehicle mandatory liability insurance becomes absolute whenever injury or damage covered by the policy occurs, but the absolute liability standard does not apply to insurance coverage that exceeds the mandatory minimum limits. Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626, 57 St. Rep. 588 (2000).

Unfair Trade Practice to Require Full and Final Release of Liability Before Claim Paid Within Policy Limits — "Settlement" Distinguished From "Release": Guaranty National Insurance Co. (Guaranty) provided a minimum motor vehicle liability policy for Moore, who was clearly liable for injuring the Watterses' in a car accident. Guaranty offered to settle the Watterses' claim to the extent of the policy coverage, but not without an absolute release of all liability. The Watterses declined the offer, eventually bringing an unfair trade action against Guaranty for failing to promptly pay damages for which Moore was liable. Guaranty argued that the full release from liability was necessary to effectuate a settlement, citing Thompson v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 161 M 207, 505 P2d 423 (1973), and Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191 (1992), and contended that because no settlement was proffered from the Watterses, Guaranty could not, as a matter of law, have violated this section. The Supreme Court instead applied Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997). The court clarified the relevant terms, noting that in accord with the general governing principles of contract law from which the law of settlements is derived, in the context of the Unfair Trade Practices Act, a settlement is synonymous with an enforceable bilateral contract that discharges a future or existing obligation, while a release, as a matter of law, is nothing more than an accord and satisfaction or one of several ways in which an obligation may contractually be discharged or settled for less than or for something different than from what is owed. The court concluded that a settlement between Guaranty and the Watterses was legally possible without the Watterses executing a full and final release of all liability, as evidenced by Guaranty's settlement of the Watterses' property damage claims within the limits of Moore's policy without a release. Thus, when liability resulting from an automobile accident is reasonably clear and a third-party claimant's damages undisputedly exceed mandatory minimum policy limits pursuant to 61-6-103, it is an unfair trade practice per se under this section for an insurer to condition the payment of the owed mandatory minimum policy limits on the third party's agreement to provide a full and final release of all liability in favor of an insured. An insurer who pays mandatory minimum policy limits under these circumstances does not act in bad faith per se against its insured by not obtaining a full and final liability release on the insured's behalf. Unfortunately for the Watterses, under the case law in effect at the time, Guaranty had a reasonable basis under Juedeman upon which to deny payment of policy limits, so Guaranty's cross-motion for summary judgment was granted. Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626, 57 St. Rep. 588 (2000), overruling Thompson v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 161 M 207, 505 P2d 423 (1973), and Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191 (1992), and overruled in Shilhanek v. D-2 Trucking, Inc., 2003 MT 122, 315 M 519, 70 P3d 721 (2003), to the extent that Watters implies that an insurer's obligation under Ridley is limited to the minimum coverage required by the Motor Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act.

Failure to Effectuate Insurance Settlement in Good Faith as Independent Cause of Action: Under this section, an insurer is required to attempt in good faith to effectuate prompt, fair, and equitable settlements of claims in which liability has become reasonably clear. A violation of this provision gives rise to an independent cause of action under 33-18-242. Because the continuing duty of good faith is not ended by commencement of a lawsuit by an insured, that duty can be breached by an insurer's postfiling conduct, including the actions of attorneys conducting the insurer's defense. Amendment of the claim to include an action under 33-18-242 related back to the original claim and was properly allowed. Further, third-party defendant's alleged failure to conduct a reasonable investigation and its subsequent refusal to pay the claim, although occurring more than 2 years before commencement of plaintiff's cause of action, were, if proved, ostensibly part of the bad faith postjudgment conduct. Thus, the evidence of those acts was not time-barred. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 288, 297 M 33, 991 P2d 915, 56 St. Rep. 1152 (1999), following Safeco Ins. Co. v. Ellinghouse, 223 M 239, 725 P2d 217, 43 St. Rep. 1689 (1986), and Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 261 M 91, 861 P2d 895, 50 St. Rep. 1210 (1993).

Insurer Liable for Payment When Liability Clear — Legislative Amendment Poor Evidence — Purpose of Statute — Leveraging Under One Coverage Prohibited — Juedeman Overruled: Guaranty National admitted 90% of the liability for an accident involving Ridley and its insured, Roope, but refused to pay Ridley's medical expenses without settling all of Ridley's claim against Roope. Ridley filed an action for a declaratory judgment against Guaranty National, asking the District Court to find that Guaranty National had a duty to pay medical expenses under this section. The District Court concluded that Guaranty National had no obligation to pay Ridley's medical expenses until final settlement of all claims arising from the accident. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that subsections (6) and (13) of this section impose an obligation on an insurer to pay claims when liability is reasonably clear, including claims submitted under the same type of coverage from an insurer. The Supreme Court based its decision on the following: (1) any contrary decisions by the U.S. District Court in Montana are not binding on Montana courts; (2) any construction of the statute based upon action that one Legislature failed to take to amend the statute was a "hazardous basis" for inferring intent of a previous Legislature when it enacted this section; (3) the purpose of the statute is to encourage prompt settlement of claims and is more consistent with the state's public policy expressed in 61-6-301 through 61-6-304; and (4) it was the "leveraging" of undisputed claims (using the payment of one claim to settle other claims in a manner to the insurer's advantage) that the Legislature sought to prohibit when it enacted the statute. To the extent that the Supreme Court implied in Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191 (1992), that the requirements of subsections (6) and (13) of this section apply only to one claim or more than one claim under different types of coverage, that implication was overruled by the Supreme Court. Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987, 54 St. Rep. 1430 (1997), followed in Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626, 57 St. Rep. 588 (2000).

Power of Court in Declaratory Judgment Action — Justiciable Controversy Presented — Brisendine Distinguished: Guaranty National admitted 90% of the liability for an accident involving Ridley and its insured, Roope, but refused to pay Ridley's medical expenses without settling all of Ridley's claim against its insured. Ridley filed an action for a declaratory judgment against Guaranty National, asking the District Court to find that Guaranty National had a duty to pay medical expenses under this section. Citing Brisendine v. Dept. of Commerce, 253 M 361, 833 P2d 1019 (1992), the District Court held that the controversy was not justiciable under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act, because there were still factual issues left to be decided, and granted Guaranty National's motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court distinguished Brisendine and noted that under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act, a party is entitled to a decision whether or not it determines all of the issues between the parties to the action. The Supreme Court also noted that Guaranty National had some legal basis for claiming that it could not legally settle part of Ridley's claims because two opinions of the U.S. District Court in Montana incorrectly construed 33-18-242(5) concerning an insurer's liability if the insurer has a reasonable basis in law or fact for contesting the claim. For these reasons, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred when it granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment. Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987, 54 St. Rep. 1430 (1997), followed and clarified in DuBray v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2001 MT 251, 307 M 134, 36 P3d 897 (2001), insofar as nothing in Ridley or in Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834 (2000), which followed Ridley, suggests that its scope should be limited to undisputed medical expenses.

Questionable Basis for Denial of Claim — Directed Verdict Inappropriate: Under common law and 33-18-242, an insurer cannot be held liable for bad faith in denying a claim if the insurer had a reasonable basis for contesting the claim or the claim amount. As determined in St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Cumiskey, 204 M 350, 665 P2d 223 (1983), an insurer may file a declaratory judgment action to obtain a determination of the validity, continuance, or coverage of the policy, the extent of liability, or the insurer's duty under the policy. However, a directed verdict is not required simply because a reasonable basis may exist to deny coverage. If reasonable people could draw different conclusions about whether an insurer had a reasonable basis for contesting a claim, the issue becomes more than a question of law and a directed verdict is inappropriate. Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 261 M 91, 861 P2d 895, 50 St. Rep. 1210 (1993).

No Error in Court's Refusal to Strike Punitive Damages Award — Interpretation of Testimony Sustained: Dees sued American National Fire Insurance Company, alleging that the insurer was guilty of actual malice in failing to settle his claim for crop damage caused by hail. Testimony at trial showed that the insurance adjusters did not examine adjacent fields to determine whether any damage had occurred there, nor did they consult experts to determine how Dees' variety of wheat differed in hail damage compared to other varieties of wheat. An executive officer of the insurer also testified on the issue of punitive damages by using language that could be interpreted to mean that in a future similar situation, the insurer would take action to get the attention of its adjusters to change their investigation and adjustment procedures. The Supreme Court held that the jury could have concluded that there was clear and convincing evidence that American National was guilty of malice as defined in 27-1-221(2). The Supreme Court also held that the District Court Judge was in the best position to hear and evaluate the testimony of the insurer's executive and to determine whether the requirements for punitive damages had been met. The District Court therefore did not err in refusing to strike the award of punitive damages. Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141, 50 St. Rep. 1068 (1993).

Refusal to Settle Hail Damage Claim — Denial of Claim Without Reasonable Investigation — Jury Question: Dees insured his wheat crop against hail damage with American National Fire Insurance Company. Immediately after a hailstorm caused damage to his fields, Dees telephoned American National, but an adjuster did not arrive until 3 weeks later. After inspecting the fields, American National refused to pay for the damage, claiming that the loss was because of wind and not hail. Both Dees and American National submitted evidence at trial supporting their respective theories on the cause of the damage to the wheat. The District Court refused to grant American National's motion for summary judgment, and the jury found for Dees. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in refusing to grant the insurer's motion for summary judgment and motion for a directed verdict. Summary judgment should not have been granted because there was a genuine issue of material fact as to whether American National had denied Dees's claim without reasonable investigation. Likewise, a directed verdict would have been improper because a directed verdict may be granted only if there is a complete lack of evidence to warrant submission of the case to a jury. Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141, 50 St. Rep. 1068 (1993).

Denial of Insurer's Argument That Frivolous Claims Justified: Farmers Insurance admitted that its counterclaim was frivolous but argued that it did not violate the unfair trade practices laws because the claim was made in order to give the insurer more leverage in settlement negotiations. The Supreme Court held that it was not inclined to exalt form over substance and ruled that the frivolous claim was an unfair trade practice. O'Fallon v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 260 M 233, 859 P2d 1008, 50 St. Rep. 1022 (1993).

Third-Party Claimant — Determination: The defendant in a personal injury case filed a counterclaim against the plaintiffs, alleging that their negligence was the cause of the automobile accident involving the parties. Subsequently, in his deposition, the defendant admitted that he had been intoxicated at the time of the accident, that he had been driving negligently, and that the plaintiffs had not been negligent. The plaintiffs sought summary judgment to dismiss the defendant's counterclaims, but prior to the hearing, the defendant voluntarily dismissed his counterclaims. The plaintiffs then sought damages from the insurer for bad faith in violation of its statutory duty to settle a claim when liability becomes reasonably clear. On appeal, the defendant's insurance company argued that the plaintiffs had no standing to sue under the unfair trade practices laws because they were not "insureds" or "third-party claimants" as those terms are used in 33-18-242. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiffs had alleged that they were injured by the insurer's violation of its duty to settle and therefore were third-party claimants within the meaning of the statute. O'Fallon v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 260 M 233, 859 P2d 1008, 50 St. Rep. 1022 (1993).

Conditioning Payment of Son's Bodily Injury Claim on Mother's Release of Loss of Consortium Claim Not Leveraging: Juedeman argued that Farmers Union had violated this section, which prohibits leveraging, by conditioning payment of her son's claim for bodily injury on her release of her loss of consortium claim. A violation of this section requires a manipulation of two coverages. An insurer must withhold prompt settlement of a reasonably clear liability claim under one coverage in order to influence a claim arising out of another coverage. The Supreme Court held that the insurance company had not engaged in leveraging because both claims arose from only one coverage under the policy. Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191, 49 St. Rep. 544 (1992), overruled in Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987, 54 St. Rep. 1430 (1997).

No Existence of Offer of Settlement Without Agreement to Release: Plaintiff, Juedeman, contended that Farmers Union failed to make a good faith attempt to effectuate a fair settlement by insisting that Juedeman release Farmers Union's insured's estate. The Supreme Court held that plaintiff's refusal to agree to the release was the cause for the delay in payment and therefore there could be no bad faith claim against the insurance company. Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191, 49 St. Rep. 544 (1992), distinguished and overruled in Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626, 57 St. Rep. 588 (2000), and overruled in its entirety in Shilhanek v. D-2 Trucking, Inc., 2003 MT 122, 315 M 519, 70 P3d 721 (2003).

Standard of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Applicable to Self-Insurer: A fire, caused by a floating power line owned and maintained by Montana Power Company (MPC) destroyed plaintiff's home and property. In filing a negligence action against MPC, plaintiff also alleged that MPC had breached an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing and violated Title 33, ch. 18, commonly known as the Unfair Trade Practices Act (Act) in the settlement of plaintiff's claim. At trial, the jury was instructed that duties described in the Act applied to MPC. On appeal, MPC argued that the District Court erred, contending that the Act does not apply to a self-insurer such as MPC. The Supreme Court ruled that while the Act does not apply to MPC, "a self-insurer, such as MPC which has a claims department, is held to a standard of good faith and fair dealing when settling claims against it". Ogden v. Mont. Power Co., 44 St. Rep. 330 (1987); on reconsideration, opinion withdrawn and replaced by a holding that the Montana Insurance Code's Unfair Trade Practices Act does not apply to a self-insured entity. Ogden v. Mont. Power Co., 229 M 387, 747 P2d 201, 44 St. Rep. 2068 (1987), followed in Martel v. Mont. Power Co., 231 M 96, 752 P2d 140, 45 St. Rep. 460 (1988).

Insurer's Duty to Settle Third-Party Claim Within Policy Limits — Evidence to Support Bad Faith: Plaintiff, a Kalispell ophthalmologist, pierced Frisnegger's eyeball with a needle while administering a local anesthetic to his eyelid. A cataract formed on the eye. Plaintiff notified his local insurance agent and on his direction notified defendant in writing that plaintiff was entirely at fault. Frisnegger filed suit against plaintiff. Defendant did not feel the claim was worth over $45,000 and refused to settle within the policy limits of $100,000. A jury verdict was returned for Frisnegger in the amount of $175,000. Plaintiff then brought suit against defendant alleging negligence and bad faith on the part of defendant for failure to settle the claim within policy limits. A jury verdict awarding plaintiff compensatory damages of $250,000 and punitive damages of $300,000 was returned. On appeal, the Supreme Court stated that the duty to accept a reasonable offer within policy coverage limits arises from an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing that neither party will do anything which will injure the right of the other to receive the benefits of the agreement. One of the usual benefits of liability insurance is the settlement of claims without litigation or at least without trial if the cause is litigated. The implied obligation of good faith and fair dealing requires the insurer to settle in an appropriate case, although not required by the express terms of the policy. Where a liability insurance company by the terms of its policy obtains from the insured an irrevocable power to determine whether to accept or reject an offer of compromise, a fiduciary duty between the insured and insurer is created. The court applied the six-factor test set out in Jessen v. O'Daniel, 210 F. Supp. 317 (D.C. Mont. 1982). The court found that the failure of defendant through its agents to follow established standards of investigation, evaluation, negotiation, and communication with its insured were sufficient factors to uphold the jury's finding of bad faith. Gibson v. W. Fire Ins. Co., 210 M 267, 682 P2d 725, 41 St. Rep. 1048 (1984).

Punitive Damages — Insurance Settlement Practices: Plaintiff's son purchased life insurance, including an accidental death rider, from defendant. The son was found dead in a Bozeman motel room. The death was determined to be an overdose of chloroform through inhalation. The policy rider excluded payment on death due to suicide or drug overdose. On June 11, 1980, defendant sent plaintiff a check for the basic policy amount with a restrictive endorsement on the back. Plaintiff contested the denial of accidental death benefits. On August 20, plaintiff returned the tendered check, and on September 5, 1980, filed suit against defendant seeking actual and punitive damages. On September 9, 1980, defendant mailed the same check without the restrictive endorsement. A jury found that the plaintiff was not entitled to the accidental death benefits but awarded $30,000 in punitive damages. Defendant appealed. In order to award punitive damages there would have had to be a violation of the insurance laws for which a penalty is prescribed and actual damages. The court found that a restrictive endorsement as a general business practice in contested settlements was an unfair claim settlement practice. The actual damages were lost interest earnings and out-of-pocket expenses for legal counsel. Actual damages need only be nominal in order to award punitive damages. Harris v. Am. Gen. Life Ins. Co., 202 M 393, 658 P2d 1089, 40 St. Rep. 164 (1983).

Action Against Defendant's Insurer Prosecuted Jointly With Action Against Defendant — Failure of Duty to Settle: This section, in conjunction with 33-18-1004 and 27-1-104, gives rise to a civil action by a claimant against defendant's insurer because the obligation imposed by this section to fairly settle includes claimants as well as insureds. Because the action is independent of the ultimate liability of the defendant, it may be prosecuted jointly with an action against the defendant insured, and since Rule 411, Montana Rules of Evidence, only prohibits the introduction of insurance for the purpose of showing negligence or liability, the separate issue involved does not give rise to a violation of the rule. Klaudt v. Flink, 202 M 247, 658 P2d 1065, 40 St. Rep. 64 (1983), overruled in Fode v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 221 M 282, 719 P2d 414, 43 St. Rep. 814 (1986). Fode was distinguished in Peris v. Safeco Ins. Co., 276 M 486, 916 P2d 780, 53 St. Rep. 481 (1996).

Punitive Damages — Malice Implied: The insurer's conduct was both harmful to the insured and unlawful because it violated a statute. Its malice will therefore be implied because its actions were unjustifiable, and punitive damages are justified in such a case. First Sec. Bank v. Goddard, 181 M 407, 593 P2d 1040 (1979).

Tort Action — Failure to Pay Promptly: An insurer has not only a contractual duty to make payment of a valid claim but a statutory duty to do so as soon as possible. It is the breach of that statutory requirement, a duty independent of the insurance contract, that gives rise to tort liability. The measure of damages in such a case is provided in 27-1-317. First Sec. Bank v. Goddard, 181 M 407, 593 P2d 1040 (1979).

Punitive Damages — Failure to Pay: If insurance company stalled payment on claim deliberately and ultimately failed to pay, breach of insurance contract was also violation of Insurance Code and punitive damages could be awarded. Helton v. Reserve Life Ins. Co., 399 F. Supp. 1322 (D.C. Mont. 1975).

Exemplary and Punitive Damages — Insurer Maliciously Avoids Payment: If insurance company stalled payment on claim deliberately, and ultimately failed to pay, breach of insurance contract was also violation of insurance code, and punitive damages could be awarded. Helton v. Reserve Life Ins. Co., 399 F. Supp. 1322 (D.C. Mont. 1975).

Credit Disability Insurance — Punitive Damages Not Barred: The District Court erred in granting the defendant insurer's motion to strike the plaintiff's claim for punitive damages arising out of the defendant's refusal to pay on a credit disability insurance policy. The general rule that exemplary damages are not allowed in actions arising out of breach of contract would not preclude award of exemplary damages where acts constituting alleged breach of contract also violated state law. State ex rel. Larson v. District Court, 149 M 131, 423 P2d 598 (1967), distinguished in State ex rel. Cashen v. District Court, 157 M 40, 482 P2d 567 (1971).

Expert Testimony Not Needed on Insurance Agent's Standard of Care in Procuring Requested Insurance: In an insureds' negligence and contract action against an insurance agency for failure to procure requested coverage, an insurance agent testified as to the duties and responsibilities of an insurance agent when asked to procure specific insurance. Expert testimony on the insurance agent's standard of care and breach of the standard was not required. Fillinger v. NW. Agency, Inc., of Great Falls, 283 M 71, 938 P2d 1347, 54 St. Rep. 500 (1997).

Insurance Agent's Failure to Procure Requested Coverage — Duty of Insured to Read Policy and Confirm Requested Coverage: The jury reasonably found that it was not unreasonable for husband and wife to have not read the insurance policy covering their outfitting business and that it was reasonable for them to act in reliance upon the representations of their insurance agent. The insureds did not have an absolute duty to read the policy. Failure to read a policy might amount to contributory negligence, but that is a question for the jury. The husband testified that he asked the agent for a policy that would cover everything, especially if someone were hurt on a horse, and that he was told that it would. He asked the same question for a number of years each time that the policy was renewed and was always given an affirmative answer. The agent testified that the husband frequently asked about and was concerned about "horse rider" coverage. When an accident occurred involving a horse, the agent told the husband that the bills would be paid. However, the insurance company failed to pay the bills, and the insured sued the agent for negligence and breach of contract. Fillinger v. NW. Agency, Inc., of Great Falls, 283 M 71, 938 P2d 1347, 54 St. Rep. 500 (1997). See also Bailey v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 119, 370 Mont. 73, 300 P.3d 1149, in which the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court's award of summary judgment to the insurer was improper because a genuine issue of material fact existed as to why discrepancies in coverage occurred when the insureds transferred their automobile policy from Oregon to Montana and requested that the insurer procure the same coverage.

Insurance Agents Subject to This Law in Procuring Insurance for Insureds: The relationship between insureds and an insurance agency in regard to insurance that the agency procures for insureds clearly involves the business of insurance, and misrepresentations of coverage by an insurance agent of the agency are prohibited trade practices. Preemption — State HIPAA and Unfair Trade Practices Act Claims: Plaintiff insureds claimed that the defendant insurer's premium increases violated Montana's Unfair Trade Practices Act, specifically 33-18-206, and 33-22-526, Montana's "little HIPAA" law. The federal District Court denied the plaintiffs' motion to remand to state court and granted the defendant summary judgment on both claims. On appeal, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals held that the state unfair insurance practices law was not preempted by federal law because it creates a separate right that cannot be remedied under federal law, but that federal HIPAA law preempted the Montana

HIPAA law, both jurisdictionally and on the merits, because Montana's HIPAA provision is identical to and expressly relies on federal law. Fossen v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont., 660 F3d 1102 (9th Cir. 2011).

Case Notes

Pro Rata Clause Discriminatory: Where insured was charged the same premium as another insured who carried no other crop insurance but the benefits payable to him would be only a part of those payable to another insured without other crop insurance under policy's pro rata clause, it was proper for the District Court to find the pro rata clause a violation of the unfair discrimination statute and unlawful because a "full risk" premium was paid and only a partial recovery was possible due to the pro rata clause. McCarter v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 169 M 269, 546 P2d 249 (1976). See also Musselman v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 251 M 262, 824 P2d 271, 49 St. Rep. 50 (1992), in which it was held that the District Court did not err in failing to enforce a pro rata clause in a fire insurance policy when two separate individuals were insuring two entirely different interests in the same property.

Rebate of Commission: A fire insurance solicitor (now producer) who, pursuant to an agreement with an agent of the owner of a business block, paid over to the agent two-thirds of the commission earned by him in writing the insurance upon such block was guilty of "rebating" under section 40-1327, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed). Case Notes

Binder Coverage Received but No Policy Issued — No Statutory Violation: Agent Currie collected a sum from McNeil as a premium that he submitted to the insurer. McNeil received binder coverage for two brief periods but did not receive a policy because the insurer subsequently declined to accept the risk based on McNeil's short time in business and low credit rating. These facts did not support a violation of this section. McNeil v. Currie, 253 M 9, 830 P2d 1241, 49 St. Rep. 312 (1992).

Admission of Medical Records to Determine Whether Material Misrepresentation Made on Application — No Prejudice: When applying for credit life insurance, plaintiff's husband, Clarence, indicated that he was in good health. Less than 1 year later, Clarence died, and plaintiff submitted an insurance claim, but the claim was denied and the policy was rescinded, so plaintiff sued. At trial, the District Court admitted Clarence's medical records. Plaintiff argued that the records were allowed without foundation showing that the records existed when Clarence applied for the insurance or that the records were relied on by the parties. The court concluded that it was for the jury to decide whether Clarence made a material misrepresentation that would justify defendant's action in denying the claim and rescinding the policy. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the District Court did not act arbitrarily or exceed the bounds of reason in admitting the records for jury inspection and that plaintiff failed to identify any prejudicial information in the records or show how introduction of the records harmed the case. Williams v. Union Fidelity Life Ins. Co., 2005 MT 273, 329 M 158, 123 P3d 213 (2005). See also Lopez v. Josephson, 2001 MT 133, 305 M 446, 30 P3d 326 (2001).

Evidence Related to Plaintiff's Bankruptcy Properly Precluded From Trial Regarding Plaintiff's Purchase of Credit Life Insurance: When Clarence and Barbara purchased a vehicle, the dealer offered credit life insurance as part of the transaction. Clarence died within 1 year of the purchase, but the insurer denied a life insurance claim and rescinded the policy. Barbara sued the insurer for fraud and bad faith. At trial, defendant sought to introduce evidence regarding plaintiff's bankruptcy, but the trial court granted Barbara's motion in limine excluding the bankruptcy evidence, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court found no evidence that the trial court acted arbitrarily or exceeded the bounds of reason in granting the motion in limine, and the trial court was affirmed. Williams v. Union Fidelity Life Ins. Co., 2005 MT 273, 329 M 158, 123 P3d 213 (2005). See also Lopez v. Josephson, 2001 MT 133, 305 M 446, 30 P3d 326 (2001).

Inapplicability of Filed Rate Doctrine to Claim of Violation of State Law Regarding Credit Life Insurance: Plaintiff asserted that defendant's credit life insurance application was ambiguous, entitling plaintiff to judgment as a matter of law when defendant rejected plaintiff's claim for benefits and rescinded plaintiff's certificate of insurance. Defendant claimed that any ruling that plaintiff was entitled to judgment as a matter of law based solely on the application form would violate the filed rate doctrine set out in Keogh v. Chicago & NW. Ry. Co., 260 US 156 (1922). The doctrine arose from a concern that deviation from a rate filed with a federal regulatory agency can result in imposition of civil or criminal sanctions by a court without sufficient knowledge or expertise in the ratesetting process of a regulatory agency, and the purpose of the doctrine is to ensure that rates are reasonable and evenly applied. The doctrine initially applied to common carriers but was later applied to insurance. The Montana Commissioner of Insurance asserted that the doctrine has not been extended to include insurance forms approved by a state agency and that the state's regulatory authority does not preclude a claim against an insurer for a violation of state law. The Supreme Court agreed. The filed rate doctrine did not apply in this case because there was no evidence that defendant's rates were set, reviewed, or filed by a federal regulatory agency, so defendant was not immunized under the doctrine for a violation of state law. Nevertheless, plaintiff was not entitled to summary judgment because a material question of fact remained as to whether plaintiff's husband misrepresented his health when filling out the application and, if so, whether the misrepresentation was material. Additionally, judgment as a matter of law was not appropriate because there was sufficient evidence to submit the issues to the jury. Williams v. Union Fidelity Life Ins. Co., 2005 MT 273, 329 M 158, 123 P3d 213 (2005).

GENERAL

Damages Under Breach of Contract Claims Considered Compensatory Damages Under Unfair Trade Practices Act for Pursuit of Punitive Damages: In an insurance dispute in which plaintiffs sued the defendant insurer to contest the denial of untimely filed claims, the District Court erred in instructing the jury that it must first find Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA) damages beyond the breach of insurance contract damages in order to consider malice and punitive damages under the UTPA. When an insurer is found to have violated the UTPA, damages due to the breach of insurance contract may constitute compensatory UTPA damages sufficient to present the question of malice and punitive damages to the jury. Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

Notice-Prejudice Rule Applicable in First-Party Insurance Coverage: The notice-prejudice rule applies to first-party insurance coverage disputes. Under this rule, an insurer may deny coverage based on an insured's failure to comply with a policy notice provision only if the insurer can demonstrate that it was prejudiced by the late notice. Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

Reasonable Basis in Law for Denial — No Application to Claim for Breach of Contract: The conservator for a baby girl who had suffered minor injuries in a car accident that killed her father demanded payment for her claims. The insurer denied the claims based on its belief that it had already paid out the maximum coverage under the policy. However, in St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Freyer (Freyer I), 2010 MT 191, 357 Mont. 329, 239 P.3d 143, the Supreme Court concluded that the insurer owed the daughter for her claims. Following the Supreme Court's decision, the conservator filed new claims against the insurer, including a claim for breach of the insurance contract. The insurer argued that it had a reasonable basis in law for denying the daughter's claims. Applying this rationale, the District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the insurer. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that while the "reasonable basis in law" defense applies to bad faith claims, it does not apply to a breach of contract claim. The court reversed and remanded the case to the District Court to determine the proper measure of damages related to the breach of contract. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Freyer, 2013 MT 301, 372 Mont. 191, 312 P.3d 403.

Action for Residual Diminished Value — Lack of Standing Under UDJA: The plaintiff, individually and on behalf of a class, sought residual diminished value damages — the difference between the value of a vehicle immediately before an accident and the value of the vehicle after postaccident repairs have been made — under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act (UDJA). The Supreme Court concluded the District Court erred in granting class certification. Because residual diminished value does not qualify as a type of damage that must be paid in advance as "not reasonably in dispute", the plaintiff was barred from seeking damages under the UDJA without first meeting the requirements of 33-18-242. Since the plaintiff had not satisfied the 33-18-242 requirements, he lacked individual standing to raise his claim and, therefore, lacked the requisite typicality to raise a claim on behalf of the class. Hop v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2011 MT 215, 361 Mont. 510, 261 P.3d 981.

No Relationship Between Parties — No Violation of Unfair Trade Practices Act — Summary Judgment Appropriate: The estate of a man who was severely injured in a car accident claimed that a Medicaid eligibility company located in a hospital violated the Montana Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act (UTPA) when the hospital later billed the patient directly instead of first billing Medicaid for its services. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the company because there was no relationship between the parties that supported a claim under the UTPA, given that the mother of the man had only one conversation with an employee of the company, the estate was never a client of the company, and there was no contract between the parties. Estate of Donald v. Kalispell Regional Medical Center, 2011 MT 166, 361 Mont. 179, 258 P.3d 395.

No Error in Refusing Jury Instruction on UTPA Facts No Longer at Issue: Defendant insurer offered a jury instruction regarding defendant's liability under the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA), but the District Court declined to give the instruction. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the District Court had earlier granted summary judgment in defendant's favor on the issue of UTPA liability, so defendant's proposed instruction was rendered irrelevant. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009).

Claim for Emotional Distress as Part of Unfair Trade Practices Violation — Sacco Standard Inapplicable: As part of their suit for defendant's alleged unfair trade practices, plaintiffs claimed damages for emotional distress. Defendant asserted that the claims should be dismissed because plaintiffs failed to demonstrate serious or severe emotional distress as required in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995). The Supreme Court disagreed. The Sacco heightened standard of proof applies to independent, stand-alone tort claims for negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress, not to cases alleging emotional distress as an element of damages resulting from unfair trade practices violations or torts generally. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008), following Vortex Fishing Sys., Inc. v. Foss, 2001 MT 312, 308 M 8, 38 P3d 836 (2001).

Insurer's Liability for Misrepresentation of Policy Provisions: Plaintiffs submitted a claim for medical expenses, and even though the insurer had paid similar claims on several prior occasions under the same policy, the insurer denied the claim, so plaintiffs sued for misrepresentation of the policy provisions. The District Court granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment on grounds that: (1) there was no intent by the insurer to misrepresent the policy coverage; (2) the insurer refuted any alleged intent to misrepresent by paying the claim after the misrepresentation occurred; and (3) plaintiffs' claim was not actionable because plaintiffs knew that the statement denying coverage was false. On appeal, the Supreme Court rejected the insurer's arguments. First, 33-18-201 does not distinguish between intentional and unintentional misrepresentation, but rather prohibits misrepresentation categorically, so the issue of whether an insurer intended to misrepresent policy provisions is not a factor. Second, an insurer's conduct after a misrepresentation has no connection to whether a misrepresentation actually occurred. Third, 33-18-201 contains no exceptions for misrepresentations made to claimants who accurately comprehend the meaning of a policy. Rather, the statute is intended to protect all claimants, regardless of their level of knowledge regarding the policy, so a claimant's knowledge regarding the veracity of the insurer's statement concerning policy coverage is irrelevant in determining whether a misrepresentation occurred. Therefore, the District Court erred in granting the insurer's summary judgment motion on the misrepresentation claim. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008).

In McVey v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 346, 372 Mont. 511, 313 P.3d 191, the Supreme Court held that the fact that a claim is filed by someone other than the insured does not preclude the insured from invoking the protections of 33-18-201(4) and 33-18-242 and clarified that the reference in Lorang to a "claimant" did not intend to control the scope of the protections provided or otherwise bar an insured from pursuing a claim pursuant to these statutes.

Genuine Issue of Fact Regarding Unfair Trade Practices and Punitive Damages in Insurance Case — Summary Judgment Precluded: Following an auto accident, Shelton filed claims under her insurance policy for medical payments and underinsured motorist coverage. After several unsuccessful attempts at settlement, Shelton amended the complaint 4 years after the accident to add claims for punitive damages and bad faith. The parties agreed to bifurcate the punitive damages and bad faith claims from the underinsured motorist claim. Citing subsection (5) of this section, the insurer moved for summary judgment on the punitive damages and bad faith claims on grounds that the insurer had a reasonable basis in law or in fact for contesting the claim or the amount of the claim. The District Court found, with respect to the bad faith claim, that Shelton did not present any material fact that precluded summary judgment and, with regard to the punitive damages claim, that Shelton admitted that there was no factual basis for a claim of malice and that there was no evidence of fraudulent behavior by the insurer. Summary judgment was granted to the insurer, and Shelton appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. Shelton provided evidence tending to show that the insurer failed to collect necessary records and reports and failed to share the information among its own experts, neglected to attempt in good faith to effectuate a settlement, and may have acted with malice in failing to pay Shelton the minimum amount of money that it determined that Shelton deserved. These questions of material fact precluded summary judgment, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Shelton v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 132, 337 M 378, 160 P3d 531 (2007).

Attorney Fees Not Recoverable Under Unfair Trade Practices Provisions: When plaintiffs were injured in a collision with a vehicle insured by defendant, they offered to settle their bodily injury claims for $125,000, but the insurer refused. After plaintiffs spent about $43,500 in attorney fees, the insurer settled for $125,000. Plaintiffs then sought to recover their attorney fees under the unfair trade practices provisions of this chapter, but summary judgment was granted to the insurer, so plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Although it could have done so, the Legislature did not construct the unfair trade practices provisions to specifically provide for the recovery of attorney fees. The court recognized the seeming unfairness of plaintiffs having to pay $43,500 to recover the same amount of money that they were willing to accept in the first place, but the court declined to construe the provisions to allow attorney fees to be considered as damages when the Legislature did not do so. Sampson v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 2006 MT 241, 333 M 541, 144 P3d 797 (2006), distinguished in Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

Bad Faith Claim Related to Vague Credit Life Insurance Application Not Barred — Denial of Summary Judgment Proper: When Clarence and Barbara purchased a vehicle, the dealer offered credit life insurance as part of the transaction. Clarence died within 1 year of the purchase, but the insurer denied a life insurance claim and rescinded the policy. Barbara sued the insurer for fraud and bad faith. Defendant contended that because Barbara failed to establish the elements of fraud, defendant was entitled to judgment as a matter of law on the fraud issue and that because this section barred Barbara's bad faith claim, defendant was entitled to summary judgment on Barbara's claims. The District Court denied defendant's claims for judgment, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Both of Barbara's claims were supported, and this section did not bar Barbara's bad faith claim that was related to defendant's vague application and not the defendant's handling of the claim. Questions of material fact remained, so summary judgment was not proper, and judgment as a matter of law was not appropriate because there was sufficient evidence to submit the issues to the jury. Williams v. Union Fidelity Life Ins. Co., 2005 MT 273, 329 M 158, 123 P3d 213 (2005).

Improper Assumption That Defense Verdict in Underlying Negligence Action Precludes Subsequent Unfair Trade Practices Claims — Reversible Error: Plaintiff was involved in an automobile accident when an employee of the Goosebill Ranch struck a vehicle driven by the Cloutiers and then struck plaintiff's vehicle, which was pushed across an intersection and collided with a truck that was proceeding through the intersection. Plaintiff sued Goosebill Ranch for negligence, but the jury returned a verdict for the ranch, and plaintiff appealed. The Cloutiers also sued Goosebill Ranch in a separate action, and in that case, the jury found that the ranch was negligent and awarded the damages to the Cloutiers. The damages were paid by the defendant insurance company. While appeal of plaintiff's negligence case was pending, plaintiff settled, and the judgment against plaintiff was released as part of the settlement, but plaintiff reserved the right to bring a bad faith action against that insurer. Plaintiff then brought an unfair trade practices claim against the insurers, asserting violation of this section and alleging claims for outrage or intentional infliction of severe emotional distress. The District Court held that the initial jury verdict for Goosebill Ranch provided the insurers with a reasonable basis defense to plaintiff's subsequent unfair trade practices claim and that plaintiff could not bring a statutory bad faith action claiming liability was reasonably clear when the jury had decided the opposite, so plaintiff's claim was dismissed. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The District Court's assumption that the unfair trade practices claim sought to relitigate the underlying claim and that the issues in both claims were the same was incorrect because the issues were in fact separate. An unfair trade practices claim is considered an independent cause of action. The District Court's reasoning that an unfair trade practices claimant must first establish liability in an underlying claim and that an adverse jury verdict defeats the claim was also erroneous because under this section, a settlement of the underlying claim is sufficient to allow an unfair trade practices claim, and a defense verdict in the underlying negligence suit was not tantamount to a finding that the insurer did not engage in unfair trade practices. Further, a ruling that a defense verdict provided a reasonable basis defense to a subsequent unfair trade practices claim as a matter of law was also erroneous because insurers would then be encouraged to obtain defense verdicts at any cost to shield themselves from subsequent unfair trade practices claims. Thus, a defense verdict in the underlying negligence claim did not collaterally estop plaintiff from pursuing an unfair trade practices claim. Last, plaintiff's failure to raise the issue of insurer misconduct in a motion under former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), in the underlying negligence case did not preclude pursuit of an unfair trade practices claim because the unfair trade practices claims were not litigated in the underlying case and were not issues that should have been litigated in the negligence suit for personal injuries. Limitation of Action — Workers' Compensation Third Party and Bad Faith Claims: A third-party claimant may not bring an action pursuant to Title 33, ch. 18, commonly known as the Unfair Trade Practices Act, until the underlying claim has been settled or a judgment entered in favor of the claimant on the underlying claim. The statute of limitations on such a claim is 1 year from the date of settlement or entry of judgment on the underlying claim, even though the Act does not define what constitutes an underlying claim. A common-law bad faith claim accrues when: (1) all of the elements of the claim or cause exist or have occurred; (2) the right to maintain an action on the claim or cause is complete; or (3) a court or other agency is authorized to accept jurisdiction of the action. The statute of limitations for a common-law bad faith claim is 3 years and begins to run when the claim or action accrues. The accrual date of a bad faith claim arising out of a separate and independent disputed issue is established by determining whether that particular issue has been ultimately resolved, regardless of the existence or absence of a resolution of other issues within the workers' compensation case. Therefore, for statute of limitations purposes, statutory and common-law bad faith claims against an insurer that are predicated on actions taken in adjusting a workers' compensation claim accrue when the Workers' Compensation Court enters a judgment ordering the insurer to pay for a previously denied benefit but leaves unresolved the ultimate determinations of the extent and duration of the worker's disability. Exch., 221 M 282, 719 P2d 414 (1986).

Unfair Trade Practices Act Preempted by ERISA Private Enforcement Provision: A terminally ill paralegal sued a disability insurer, claiming benefits and other damages under a long-term disability insurance policy under both the federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) and this chapter, commonly known as the Unfair Trade Practices Act. The District Court entered judgment for the insured under ERISA claims, but ruled for the insurer on the claims under this chapter. On appeal, the Ninth Circuit Court affirmed the District Court decision, ruling that the plaintiff's claims under this chapter seeking non-ERISA damages for claim processing causes of action were preempted by ERISA's private enforcement provision. Elliot v. Fortis Benefits Ins. Co., 337 F3d 1138 (2003).

Dismissal of Insurer Improper in Light of Dispute Over Amount of Damages Owing in Excess of Liability Limits: Following a vehicle accident, a couple sought recovery for injuries and loss of consortium and also alleged that the damages exceeded the limits of defendants' coverage, entitling them to recover from their own policy. The District Court bifurcated the claims and then sua sponte dismissed the insurer from the action without prejudice. The couple sought to reverse the dismissal order, and the Supreme Court obliged. The District Court held that because a jury had not determined the couple's damages and because the insurer had agreed to pay the amount of the verdict up to the policy limits, there was no dispute between the couple and the insurer. However, the Supreme Court noted that the couple and the insurer disagreed on the amount of damages in excess of the amount that was payable under the liability limits of the policy. This was a dispute that the couple was entitled to litigate, so dismissal of the insurer was improper, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. State ex rel. Gadbaw v. District Court, 2003 MT 127, 316 M 25, 75 P3d 1238 (2003), following Dill v. District Court, 1999 MT 85, 294 M 134, 979 P2d 188 (1999). See also Dias v. Healthy Mothers, Healthy Babies, Inc., 2002 MT 323, 313 M 172, 60 P3d 986 (2002).

Failure of Insurer to Pay Within Sixty-Day Period Specified in Insurance Contract — No Error in Interpretation of Contract: An insurance contract required the insurer to pay for a loss within 60 days after the insurer received proof of loss and: (1) the parties reached an agreement; (2) there was a final judgment; or (3) the insured filed an appraisal with the insurer. The insured sought money damages because the claim was not paid within the 60-day period following the joint appraisal, which resulted in plaintiffs' alleged mental anguish and emotional distress. However, given a lengthy dispute over the amount of damages, the significant disparity between estimates, and plaintiffs' rejection of the joint appraisal, the District Court found that the agreement contemplated by the contract that would trigger the 60-day payment period was never reached. Plaintiffs appealed on grounds that the District Court misinterpreted the contract. The Supreme Court affirmed. The rejected joint appraisal did not constitute an agreement. Because the contractual requirements for the 60-day payment period were not met, the District Court did not err when it declined to conclude that the insurer should have made payment within 60 days of the joint appraisal. Nelson v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 2003 MT 101, 315 M 268, 68 P3d 689 (2003).

Failure of Proof of Unfair Trade Practices — Action of Insurer in Determining Proof of Loss: Plaintiffs alleged that their insurer refused to pay for hail damage to their home and sought money damages for mental anguish and emotional distress, punitive damages, costs, and attorney fees. The underlying cause was dismissed with prejudice after the insurer made the payment, so the only remaining claims were for loss of the use of money and the derivative claim seeking punitive damages. The District Court found in favor of the insurer, concluding that there was a failure of proof for the claims under 33-18-201(4) and (6), and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Under this section, an insurer may not be held liable if the insurer has a reasonable basis in law or in fact for contesting a claim or the amount of a claim. In this case, it was reasonable for the insurer to immediately seek bids for the replacement costs and to seek current bids from contractors following plaintiffs' rejection of a joint appraisal. The insurer's actions were reasonable, and little if any of the delay could be attributed to the insurer. In the absence of evidence from plaintiffs to the contrary, the alleged unfair trade practice was unproved. Nelson v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 2003 MT 101, 315 M 268, 68 P3d 689 (2003).

State Law Tort Claims Not Protected or Prohibited by FELA — Dismissal for Failure to State Claim Improper: Reidelbach worked for the railroad for about 20 years but was forced to stop working because of job-related disabling cumulative spinal injuries. Reidelbach reached an agreement with the railroad's claim representatives under which he would forego pursuing a claim under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) and the railroad would propose a fair settlement for the injuries. After 2 years, no settlement was offered, and ultimately the parties exchanged counteroffers, but no agreement on an amount was reached. Reidelbach then filed a timely FELA claim and also brought several state claims, alleging that the railroad had engaged in unfair, dilatory, and fraudulent claims practices. The District Court concluded that all the postinjury state claims were preempted by FELA and dismissed them pursuant to former Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), so Reidelbach appealed. Following an extensive analysis of federal law related to preemption in its various forms, the Supreme Court held that Reidelbach's state claims were neither expressly nor impliedly preempted by FELA and did not conflict with or stand as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of FELA. Therefore, the District Court erred in dismissing Reidelbach's state claims on grounds of FELA preemption, and the case was reversed and remanded for trial in state court. Reidelbach v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2002 MT 289, 312 M 498, 60 P3d 418 (2002).

Forman Defense — Issues of Material Fact Regarding Whether Insurance Company Breached Duty to Inform Agent of Litigation Risks in Sale of Policy — Summary Judgment Inappropriate: An insured brought an action against Deonier, an insurance agent, and Paul Revere Life Insurance Company (Revere) to recover benefits and damages after the insured's claim was denied on grounds of a preexisting condition, despite the incontestability clause in the policy. The agent cross-claimed against the company for indemnity and breach of fiduciary duty, contending that there was a significant amount of evidence that Revere planned to assert the Forman defense in Montana (see Mass. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Forman, 516 F2d 425 (5th Cir. 1975), in which an insurer asserts a legal defense to the incontestability clause based on its definition of sickness as excluding disabilities that manifested themselves prior to the date of issue of the policy) and that Revere's failure to inform Deonier of its intention to invoke the defense was a clear breach of Revere's duty to inform its agents of a risk of pecuniary loss from potential lawsuits. Revere asserted that, pursuant to Doettl v. Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co., 505 F. Supp. 127 (D.C. Mont. 1981), in which a Montana federal District Court endorsed the Forman defense, it had no reason to believe that its policy interpretation might be in violation of Montana law and therefore did not breach its duty to inform its agents of risk of pecuniary loss. The District Court found that Revere owed Deonier a fiduciary duty pursuant to Restatement (Second) of Agency 435 (1958), but, apparently applying this section, determined that Revere did not breach that duty and dismissed the breach of fiduciary duty action by summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court found the application of this section to be misplaced, the proper analysis being simply whether Revere breached Restatement (Second) of Agency 435 (1958). The Supreme Court agreed that a principal has no duty to inform its agent of unknown future legal positions, but in this case, the potential consequences of applying the Forman defense were not unknown, having been the subject of a Revere corporate counsel paper published in 1987, years before the disability policy at issue in this case was issued. The court also found Revere's argument based on Doettl to be without merit. Although Doettl applied some Montana law, it was not binding on the Montana Supreme Court. Because the issue was still one of first impression in Montana, Revere could not rely on Doettl to support its position that as a matter of uncontroverted fact and law, it had no knowledge of risk to its agents. Thus, the question of whether Revere breached its duty to inform Deonier of the risks of litigation involved issues of material fact, so the District Court's award of summary judgment to Revere was reversible error. Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2000 MT 238, 301 M 347, 9 P3d 622, 57 St. Rep. 989 (2000).

Indemnity of Insurance Agent for Defending Actions Performed on Insurer's Behalf in Solicitation of Application for Insurance: An insured brought a negligent misrepresentation action against Deonier, an insurance agent, and Paul Revere Life Insurance Company (Revere) to recover benefits and damages after the insured's claim was denied on grounds of a preexisting condition, despite the incontestability clause in the policy. Deonier cross-claimed against the company for indemnity, and the District Court required Revere to indemnify for damages that Deonier suffered as a result of the lawsuit. Revere appealed on grounds that Deonier was acting as an agent for the insured when recommending a disability policy, rather than as an agent for Revere, asserting that the fees that Deonier incurred were for defending the insured's claim that Deonier was actively negligent, defeating an indemnity claim. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that because Revere admitted in its pleadings that there was no basis in law or fact for the negligent misrepresentation claim against Deonier, Revere implicitly conceded that Deonier's liability to the insured arose solely from the agency relationship between Deonier and Revere, a situation in which indemnity was required. Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2000 MT 238, 301 M 347, 9 P3d 622, 57 St. Rep. 989 (2000). See also Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115 (1986), and Restatement (Second) of Agency 439 (1958).

Claim for Common-Law Tort of Bad Faith by Third Party Not Preempted by Statute — General Statute of Limitations Applicable: The District Court dismissed Brewington's complaint against two insurance companies based on the conclusion that the complaint failed to state a claim for which relief could be granted because the claim was barred by the statute of limitations in this section regarding third-party claimants. Brewington contended that the claim was based on the common-law tort of bad faith, not on this section. The Supreme Court construed the plain language of the statute in determining that by its terms, this section does not prohibit a third-party claimant from bringing an action for bad faith. Both Vigue v. Evans Prod. Co., 187 M 1, 608 P2d 488 (1980), and Hayes v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 187 M 148, 609 P2d 257 (1980), establish a common-law cause of action for bad faith that was not affected by the passage of this section. When the common law is not in conflict with a statute, the common law applies. Thus, the District Court's conclusion that this section prohibited Brewington from pleading the common-law tort of bad faith was reversible error. Further, because the claim was brought for bad faith and not pursuant to this section, the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204, not the 1-year statute of limitations in this section, applied. Brewington v. Employers Fire Ins. Co., 1999 MT 312, 297 M 243, 992 P2d 237, 56 St. Rep. 1257 (1999), distinguishing Grenz v. Orion Group, Inc., 243 M 486, 795 P2d 444, 47 St. Rep. 1346 (1990).

Broad Language in Complaint as Opportunity to Litigate Unfair Claims Practices Action — Res Judicata Barring Second Action — Summary Judgment Proper: The doctrine of res judicata not only precludes a party from relitigating claims that were litigated in a previous action, but under Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Hatch, 284 M 1, 942 P2d 716, 54 St. Rep. 780 (1997), res judicata will also bar an action for a claim that a party had an opportunity to, but did not, litigate in a previous action. In the present case, Fisher sued State Farm General Insurance Company (State Farm) and one of its agents for wrongfully denying coverage, alleging in the complaint that defendants were liable "for damages incurred as a result of the subject fire and the denial of coverage on theories of breach of contract, negligence, negligent misrepresentation, fraud, and any other applicable legal theories", and sought relief for money due under the insurance policy and "other further relief as the court may deem just and proper". One year later, Fisher filed a second action based on State Farm's denial of coverage, alleging failure to conduct a reasonable investigation of the claim and to attempt a good faith settlement. A few months later, State Farm presented a written offer of judgment on all claims in the original action, which Fisher accepted. Fisher then amended the second action to include allegations of a violation of the Unfair Claims Practices Act (UCPA) and sought punitive, special, and general damages. The District Court granted summary judgment for State Farm on grounds that the second action was barred by res judicata. The Supreme Court affirmed. Under the broad wording of the original complaint, Fisher clearly had the opportunity to litigate the UCPA claim. Had the claim been less broadly drafted, a judgment in the first action could not have barred the second action. However, the criteria of res judicata regarding identity of subject matter, issues, and relationship of the parties were met, and summary judgment on the second action was proper. Fisher's argument that the application of res judicata essentially negated statutory permissive joinder provisions and compelled mandatory joinder of otherwise independent causes of action was unpersuasive. Fisher v. St. Farm Gen. Ins. Co., 1999 MT 308, 297 M 201, 991 P2d 452, 56 St. Rep. 1236 (1999).

Common-Law Action Based on Events Occurring Before Insurance Claim: A renewed liability policy contained a change in an exclusion for pollution incidents. Following that, a claim, and defense of the insureds in a suit against them, for a pollution incident was denied. The insureds sued the insurer for negligence, bad faith, and breach of a fiduciary duty. The District Court granted the insurer summary judgment on the ground that these were common-law tort claims barred by the provision of this section, which provides that an insured suffering damages from the handling of an insurance claim may sue for breach of contract, for fraud, or under that section, but not under any other theory or cause of action. The Supreme Court reversed on the grounds that the insureds' claims were not for damages resulting from the handling of the claim because the cause of action focused on events that occurred prior to the filing and handling of the claim, that is, the failure to inform the insureds of the policy change, and that the insureds alleged pure common-law claims without adding violations under Title 33, ch. 18, commonly known as the Unfair Trade Practices Act. Thomas v. NW. Nat'l Ins. Co., 1998 MT 343, 292 M 357, 973 P2d 804, 55 St. Rep. 1388 (1998).

Duty to Inform Insured of Change in Policy Exclusion — Specific Notice as Against Notice by Providing Renewal Policy With the Change: Section 33-15-1106 provides that if an insurer offers to renew a policy on less favorable terms, the new terms take effect on the policy renewal date only if the insurer mailed or delivered notice of the new terms to the insured at least 30 days before the expiration date. That section required the insurer to inform the insured of the change in pollution coverage exclusion in a liability policy because an insurer has an affirmative duty to provide adequate notice to the insured of changes in coverage. The question whether giving the insured an amended policy that referred to and contained the pollution coverage exclusion change constituted sufficient notice should have gone to trial, and it was reversible error requiring remand of the issue to grant the insurer summary judgment under the general principle that an insured has a duty to read and examine the policy. That principle is not absolute, and the extent of the duty to read the policy depends on what is reasonable under the facts and circumstances of each case. For a renewal policy, the insured's duty to read it may be less than the duty to read the original policy. Thomas v. NW. Nat'l Ins. Co., 1998 MT 343, 292 M 357, 973 P2d 804, 55 St. Rep. 1388 (1998).

Failure to Inform Insureds of Change in Renewed Policy as Bad Faith: A renewed liability policy contained a change in an exclusion for pollution incidents. Following that, a claim, and defense of the insureds in a suit against them, for a pollution incident was denied. The insurer claimed that the insureds should have read the policy and would have noticed the change if the policy had been read. The insureds claimed that the insurer should have notified the insureds of the change. It was error for the District Court to grant the insurer summary judgment on the insureds' bad faith claim. Under Story v. Bozeman, 242 M 436, 791 P2d 767 (1990), the scope of the tort of bad faith was limited to a contractual setting in which special circumstances exist between the parties and the matter is not otherwise controlled by specific statutory provisions. The court adopted the following five elements for special circumstances: (1) the contract parties are in inherently unequal bargaining positions; (2) the complainant had a nonprofit motive for entering into the contract; (3) ordinary contract damages are inadequate because they do not require the party in the superior position to account for its actions and do not make the inferior party whole; (4) the complainant is especially vulnerable because of the type of harm that it may suffer and of necessity must place trust in the other party to perform; and (5) the other party is aware of the vulnerability. In this case, the Story test was met. Thomas v. NW. Nat'l Ins. Co., 1998 MT 343, 292 M 357, 973 P2d 804, 55 St. Rep. 1388 (1998).

Failure to Inform Insureds of Change in Renewed Policy as Breach of Fiduciary Duty: A renewed liability policy contained a change in an exclusion for pollution incidents. Following that, a claim, and defense of insureds in a suit against them, for a pollution incident was denied. The insurer claimed that the insureds should have read the policy and would have noticed the change if the policy had been read. The insureds claimed that the insurer should have notified the insureds of the change. It was error for the District Court to grant the insurer summary judgment on the insureds' claim of breach of fiduciary duty. Thomas v. NW. Nat'l Ins. Co., 1998 MT 343, 292 M 357, 973 P2d 804, 55 St. Rep. 1388 (1998).

District Court Jurisdiction Over Claims-Handling Practices: Hicklin sued the claims handler for a company in liquidation. A Montana District Court has jurisdiction over a case in which plaintiff is not proceeding against the liquidated company; does not claim entitlement to its assets, property, or estates; and is not attempting to enforce a contractual obligation of the company. The claim focuses on the claims handler's independent torts committed subsequent to the company's liquidation, and the District Court erred when it concluded that it did not have subject matter jurisdiction. Hicklin v. CSC Logic, Inc., 283 M 298, 940 P2d 447, 54 St. Rep. 675 (1997).

Bifurcation of Breach of Insurance Contract and Bad Faith Claims — Use of Supervisory Control to Require That Both Claims Be Tried to Same Jury: After the District Court bifurcated the Malta school district's insurance contract and bad faith claims, the school district requested by motion that both claims be tried to the same jury, one claim immediately following the other. The District Court denied the motion, and the school district sought a writ of supervisory control. The Supreme Court granted the writ and directed the District Court to try the contract claim and the bad faith claim to the same jury. Because this section contains no standards governing whether a bifurcated case should be tried to the same jury, the Supreme Court looked to cases decided under former Rule 42(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), for guidance and, after finding the state and federal versions of the same rule sufficiently similar, relied upon Martin v. Bell Helicopter Co., 85 FRD 654 (1980). The Supreme Court held that a two-step process should be used; it should first be determined whether bifurcation is appropriate and then whether the interests of judicial economy, fairness to the parties, clarity of the issues, and convenience require trial of the issues to the same or a different jury. In determining whether to grant the writ of supervisory control, the Supreme Court weighed the same or similar considerations also weighed by the Supreme Court pursuant to Martin v. Bell Helicopter Co. to determine whether separate juries should be used. The Supreme Court reviewed the circumstances of the case and found that the writ of supervisory control should be granted and that the District Court abused its discretion in refusing to try the two claims to the same jury. Malta Pub. School District A & 14 v. District Court, 283 M 46, 938 P2d 1335, 54 St. Rep. 486 (1997), followed in State ex rel. Gadbaw v. District Court, 2003 MT 127, 316 M 25, 75 P3d 1238 (2003).

No Policy Coverage — Reasonable Basis to Deny Coverage: Bartlett obtained an insurance binder from Allstate on a house that Bartlett intended to buy. The transaction did not close, and the house was destroyed by fire 1 month later. Allstate denied Bartlett's claim for recovery. Bartlett sued for wrongful denial of insurance proceeds and unfair trade practices. The District Court granted summary judgment to Allstate. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the lower court did not err and affirmed the summary judgment ruling. Because the transaction did not close, Bartlett did not have an insurable interest in the property at the time of loss. On that ground, Allstate clearly had a reasonable basis for not paying Bartlett's claim for insurance proceeds. Bartlett did not have a colorable claim against Allstate for unfair trade practices or for fraud, constructive fraud, or punitive damages. Bartlett v. Allstate Ins. Co., 280 M 63, 929 P2d 227, 53 St. Rep. 1300 (1996).

District Court Jurisdiction to Determine Unfair Trade Practices Alleged Before Workers' Compensation Settlement Agreement: Poteat brought a District Court complaint alleging unfair trade practices, breach of contract, and actual malice under this section. Because the underlying claim contained unresolved future workers' compensation medical benefits and the Workers' Compensation Court has exclusive jurisdiction over workers' compensation claims, the District Court determined that it had no jurisdiction to hear an unfair trade practices case until Poteat obtained a judgment or settlement of the entire underlying claim. The Supreme Court determined that counts one and four alleged actual malice and unfair trade practices before the settlement agreement, which were not based on an underlying claim that had not been settled or adjudicated, and that counts two and three alleged breach of contract and unfair trade practices after the settlement agreement, which concerned the unresolved issue of future medical benefits not yet adjudicated by the Workers' Compensation Court. The District Court erred in dismissing the entire case on grounds of lack of jurisdiction. The counts regarding unfair practices before settlement had their basis in a valid existing settlement agreement, and Poteat was therefore entitled to pursue the counts regarding presettlement trade practices. However, Poteat was not entitled to pursue the counts regarding unfair practices after settlement until the issue of future medical benefits was adjudicated. The case was thus affirmed regarding counts two and three and reversed regarding counts one and four. Poteat v. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co., 277 M 117, 918 P2d 677, 53 St. Rep. 568 (1996).

Certified Questions — Settlement or Judgment Not Required as Precondition to Action Against Insurer — Unfair Claims Settlement Practices Action Not Barred by Terms of Policy: In an original proceeding pursuant to former Rule 44, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the Supreme Court responded to two certified questions from the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals and held that an insured need not pursue the underlying claim to the point of settlement or judgment before bringing an action against the insurer under the unfair claims settlement practices statutes codified in Title 33, ch. 18. This was true, notwithstanding a "no action" clause in the insurance policy, because the clause was contrary to public policy. The Supreme Court also held that the insured was not barred by the "no action" clause of the policy from bringing an action under the unfair claims settlement practices statutes when the company did not object to direct settlement between the plaintiff and insured in the underlying action and when the insurer contributed the policy limits to that settlement. Peris v. Safeco Ins. Co., 276 M 486, 916 P2d 780, 53 St. Rep. 481 (1996).

Standards for Testimonial Waiver of Work Product: The standards for waiver by testimonial use of the work product differ between opinion and ordinary work product. With ordinary work product, once a witness makes testimonial use of the files, the witness implicitly waives the protections of the work-product doctrine with respect to factual matters covered in the testimony of the witness. However, waiver by testimonial use does not apply to opinion work product unless the testimony directly discloses the witness's impressions. Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 261 M 91, 861 P2d 895, 50 St. Rep. 1210 (1993). See also In re Martin Marietta Corp., 856 F2d 619 (4th Cir. 1988).

Individuals as Well as Insurers Liable for Unfair Trade Practices: The defendant in a personal injury case filed a counterclaim against the plaintiffs, alleging that their negligence was the cause of the automobile accident involving the parties. Subsequently, in his deposition, the defendant admitted that he had been intoxicated at the time of the accident, that he had been driving negligently, and that the plaintiffs had not been negligent. The plaintiffs sought summary judgment to dismiss the defendant's counterclaims, but prior to the hearing, the defendant voluntarily dismissed his counterclaims. The plaintiffs then sought damages from the insurer and the agent for bad faith in violation of the insurer's statutory duty to settle a claim when liability becomes reasonably clear. The agent argued that this section limits liability for unfair trade practices to insurers. The Supreme Court held that that portion of Klaudt v. Flink, 202 M 247, 658 P2d 1065 (1983), holding that 33-18-201 did afford a plaintiff a common-law cause of action against individuals, had never been reversed or modified. The Supreme Court further held that the statutory cause of action provided for in this section and the different standard of proof provided for by the statute apply only to insurers, while the common-law cause of action and standard of proof provided for by 33-18-201 apply to insurers and individuals. O'Fallon v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 260 M 233, 859 P2d 1008, 50 St. Rep. 1022 (1993), followed in Debruycker v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 266 M 294, 880 P2d 819, 51 St. Rep. 835 (1994), in which the Supreme Court acknowledged the different standards of proof for claims against individuals and insurers, but nevertheless reversed a lower court decision striking a jury punitive damage award against an individual when the common-law standing of the party was not raised as an issue prior to appeal.

Administration of Automobile Service Contract — Trade Practices Claim to Await Resolution of Breach of Contract Claim: When Harman bought an automobile from a dealer, he also bought an extended service contract that was to be administered by MIA. MIA declared itself bankrupt shortly after Harman's purchase. Century, a wholly owned subsidiary of CIGNA, sold an insurance policy to the car dealer to cover repair costs not covered by the agreement between the dealer and MIA. When MIA declared bankruptcy, AAC, another subsidiary of CIGNA, was used to adjust service contracts sold by MIA. Later, Harman made a claim against the service contract when the front axle of his vehicle was damaged. AAC refused the claim, saying that the repair was not covered by the contract. Harman brought a breach of contract action and an unfair trade practices claim against AAC. The Supreme Court held that because Harman was a third-party beneficiary of the agreement between Century and AAC, he could sue AAC for breach of contract, but pursuant to subsection (6)(b) of this section, MCA, the unfair trade practices action must await resolution of the underlying contract action against AAC or the car dealer. Harman v. MIA Serv. Contracts, 260 M 67, 858 P2d 19, 50 St. Rep. 954 (1993).

Excess Insurer's Action Against Primary Insurer Based Upon Subrogation and Not Independent Right — Dismissal of Other Action — No Subrogation: St. Paul's insured, Lynn, and Allstate's insured, Glassing, were involved in a car accident. After judgment against Glassing, St. Paul paid Lynn pursuant to the underinsured motorist provision of its policy and then sought recovery itself against Allstate based on a right of equitable subrogation and Allstate's failure to settle

Lynn's claim. The Supreme Court held that St. Paul could not act as a third-party claimant and bring an action directly against Allstate based upon subrogation and Allstate's failure as a primary insurer to pay its policy limits to Lynn. The Supreme Court noted that there is no independent duty of Allstate to pay the policy amount to St. Paul, that duty depends only upon subrogation of the rights of Lynn, and that at the time of the action, Lynn had no right against Allstate because of a stipulation dismissing an action in federal District Court against Allstate. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 257 M 47, 847 P2d 705, 50 St. Rep. 154 (1993), followed in Nimmick v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 270 M 315, 891 P2d 1154, 52 St. Rep. 208 (1995).

Cause of Action Applicable to Insurer Only: A workers' compensation claimant filed a complaint in District Court against an insurer and the attorneys and the law firm defending the insurer, alleging bad faith in the adjusting or handling of his claim. The court properly dismissed the complaint upon finding that the underlying claim had not been settled or a judgment entered in claimant's favor. The Supreme Court applied this section in holding that the law firm and its attorneys defending the insurer did not fall within the definition of an "insurer" against whom an independent action could be maintained. Grenz v. Orion Group, Inc., 243 M 486, 795 P2d 444, 47 St. Rep. 1346 (1990).

Proof of Liability of Insured Not Required Prior to Bad Faith Litigation: Subsection (6)(b) of this section requires settlement or entry of judgment on the underlying claim prior to instigation of a bad faith claim. However, this section does not require that liability of the insured be established as a condition precedent to bad faith litigation. Lough v. Ins. Co. of N. America, 242 M 171, 789 P2d 576, 47 St. Rep. 646 (1990).

Bad Faith Claim Suspended Until Liability Determined: Plaintiff sued defendant, insurer of another driver, following a three-car accident. Defendant denied any liability on the part of its insured and refused to pay any part of plaintiff's claim. Plaintiff then filed a bad faith action against defendant. The District Court granted summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case. The court overruled Klaudt v. Flink, 202 M 247, 658 P2d 1065, 40 St. Rep. 64 (1983), to the extent that Klaudt allowed a bad faith claim to be pursued although liability for an accident had not been determined. The court noted several problems in this procedure and held that all proceedings in a bad faith case alleging violations of the insurance laws which require a showing that liability be reasonably clear are suspended until the liability issues of the underlying case are determined by judgment or settlement. The bad faith case may be filed to toll the Statute of Limitations, but no discovery may be engaged. A favorable District Court judgment for the plaintiff is sufficient to trigger discovery in the bad faith case. Fode v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 221 M 282, 719 P2d 414, 43 St. Rep. 814 (1986), followed in In re Petition of Johnson, 224 M 337, 728 P2d 1354, 43 St. Rep. 2232 (1986), and distinguished in Peris v. Safeco Ins. Co., 276 M 486, 916 P2d 780, 53 St. Rep. 481 (1996). See also Holmgren v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 976 F2d 573 (1992).

Remedy in Contract or in Tort — Motion for Separate Trials: An insurer requested a separate trial on the affirmative defenses raised by cross-claim and requested that the trial of the remaining issues raised by the insured be postponed until after the final determination of the affirmative defenses. The Supreme Court noted that the insured, having a choice of two remedies, one in contract and one in tort, elected to pursue his claim in tort. Recovery by him on his claim in tort would have the effect of barring his claim for breach of contract. If the motion for separate trials had been granted, it would have converted insured's claim for tort to one for breach of contract. Insured would then have been precluded from presenting any evidence as to consequential damages for the tort, let alone any evidence relating to punitive damages. His right to trial by jury of his tort claim, guaranteed by the seventh amendment to the U.S. Constitution and Art. II, sec. 26, Mont. Const., would have been prejudiced. Denial of the motion to bifurcate was proper. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Separate Trials as Abuse of Discretion — No Written Order or Minute Entry on Motion to Bifurcate: The District Court declined to bifurcate a trial so as to determine separately whether the insured intentionally caused a fire and whether the insurer committed a breach of good faith, based on the mistaken impression that a District Court Judge earlier in jurisdiction had denied bifurcation. Although all the parties assumed such an order was made, the record disclosed no order, and the insurer neither procured a written order granting or denying the motion nor caused a minute entry to be made of the disposition of the motion. The Supreme Court found that under the insured's tort claim, the issues of fact regarding the insurer's violations of the Unfair Claims Settlement Act were so inextricably woven with the insurer's claim of arson that their separation would be an abuse of discretion resulting in extended and needless litigation. A trial court cannot be put in error on matters not brought to its attention by notice or otherwise. Section 33-18-241 (now repealed) was held not to apply, both because of the statutory effective date and because this case involved a first-party rather than a third-party claim. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

DUTY TO SETTLE

Assessment of Reasonableness Question of Law — Summary Judgment for Insurer Appropriate: Redies sued the Attorneys Liability Protection Society (ALPS) for allegedly engaging in unfair trade practices by failing to promptly settle a legal malpractice suit against one of the ALPS's insureds, for alleged tortious breach of statutory duties, and for breach of implied duty of good faith and fair dealing. At the time that the ALPS refused to settle, Montana law did not unequivocally recognize a professional duty running from a lawyer for a conservator to a nonclient beneficiary, such as Redies, although a subsequent Supreme Court case signaled that an attorney may owe a duty to nonclients in some contexts. The District Court granted summary judgment, and the Supreme Court upheld. The Supreme Court found that the ALPS had a reasonable basis in law for contesting Redies' claims at the time that the decision was made. The court clarified that although the assessment of reasonableness generally is within the province of the jury or factfinder, reasonableness is a question of law for the court to determine when it depends entirely on interpreting relevant legal precedents and evaluating the insurer's proffered defense under those precedents. Redies v. Attorneys Liability Protection Soc'y, 2007 MT 9, 335 M 233, 150 P3d 930 (2007), distinguished in Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349. See also St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Freyer, 2013 MT 301, 372 Mont. 191, 312 P.3d 403, in which the Supreme Court analyzed whether the insurer had a reasonable basis for contesting claims related to a car accident and affirmed summary judgment in favor of the insurer on the plaintiff's claims of common-law bad faith, unfair trade practices, and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

Incorrect Dismissal of Declaratory Judgment Seeking Payment of Prejudgment Medical Expenses — Ridley and Safeco Clarified: DuBray filed a complaint for a declaratory judgment, asking for a determination that Farmers Insurance Exchange (Farmers) was required to pay DuBray's medical expenses prior to settlement of or judgment on the underlying claim. DuBray also sought prejudgment interest, costs of suit, and compensatory and punitive damages. The District Court found that the complaint was effectively a bad faith action barred by this section prior to resolution of the underlying claim against Farmers and dismissed the claim in its entirety for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. DuBray appealed, citing Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834 (2000), wherein the Supreme Court approved declaratory judgment actions as a means for compelling advance payment of medical expenses. Farmers contended that Safeco authorized declaratory judgment actions only for damages that, according to Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), are owed prior to final judgment, that the only damages to which Ridley applied are undisputed medical expenses, and that the District Court should therefore be affirmed. The Supreme Court affirmed Safeco inasmuch as that case does not authorize a declaratory judgment to determine an insurer's liability prior to resolution of the underlying claim, with the exception of damages for which liability is reasonably clear, which are not barred by this section. Therefore, the District Court correctly dismissed DuBray's claims for pain and discomfort, mental distress, inconvenience, and punitive damages. However, Farmers' liability for medical damages was reasonably clear, so the District Court committed reversible error in dismissing the portion of DuBray's claim that sought payment of medical expenses. The Supreme Court went on to clarify Safeco and Ridley to ensure that those cases not be construed to apply only to medical expenses, because medical expenses are just one of the obligations incurred by victims that mandatory liability insurance laws were designed to eliminate, another being lost wages that are reasonably certain and directly related to an insured's negligence or wrongful act. DuBray v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2001 MT 251, 307 M 134, 36 P3d 897 (2001). See also Hop v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2011 MT 215, 361 Mont. 510, 261 P.3d 981, which held that residual diminished value—the difference between the value of a vehicle immediately before an accident and the value of the vehicle after postaccident repairs have been made—does not qualify as a type of damage that must be paid in advance as "not reasonably in dispute".

Declaratory Judgment Not Seeking Bad Faith Damages Not Statutorily Barred Under Unfair Trade Practices Act: Applying Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), the District Court granted declaratory judgment against Safeco Insurance Company of Illinois (Safeco) for payment of medical expenses that were no longer in dispute and that were owed under a Safeco

insured's policy. Safeco appealed on grounds that the declaratory judgment should be stayed under this section until after the settlement or final adjudication of the claim against its insured. The Supreme Court pointed out that under Fisher v. St. Farm Gen. Ins. Co., 1999 MT 308, 297 M 201, 991 P2d 452 (1999), an unfair trade practices claim against an insurer is an independent cause of action and only a third-party claimant who prevails at trial or achieves a settlement may in turn bring an unfair trade practices claim, theoretically extinguishing meritless claims before they are filed, thus protecting insurers from frivolous claims and facilitating judicial economy. However, the Supreme Court declined to transform the declaratory judgment claim in this case into an unfair trade practices claim, noting that, in fact, the unfair trade practices claim and the common-law bad faith claim had been dismissed by stipulation of the parties. The District Court did not err in concluding that because the declaratory judgment claim did not directly seek bad faith damages for an unfair trade practices violation, there was no statutory bar under this section. The declaratory judgment did not constitute a money judgment for damages in the ordinary sense, but merely removed all uncertainty and controversy over the issue of when the inevitable policy proceeds were due, and that judgment was therefore affirmed. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834, 57 St. Rep. 604 (2000), followed and clarified in DuBray v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2001 MT 251, 307 M 134, 36 P3d 897 (2001), insofar as nothing in Ridley or Safeco suggests that its scope should be limited to undisputed medical expenses. See also Hop v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2011 MT 215, 361 Mont. 510, 261 P.3d 981, which held that residual diminished value—the difference between the value of a vehicle immediately before an accident and the value of the vehicle after postaccident repairs have been made—does not qualify as a type of damage that must be paid in advance as "not reasonably in dispute".

No Direct Action Allowed Against Insurer Until Liability of Insured Established: Montana law does not allow a plaintiff to bring a direct action against an insurer until the liability of the insured has been established, unless such right is expressly sanctioned by the Legislature and not merely inferentially deduced. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834, 57 St. Rep. 604 (2000). See also Ulrigg v. Jones, 274 M 215, 907 P2d 937 (1995).

Supervisory Control Granted to Address Stay of Declaratory Judgment Until Settlement Reached or Judgment Entered: Hill was injured in a vehicle accident caused by the negligence of Bennett, an insured of Safeco Insurance Company of Illinois (Safeco). Although Safeco apparently paid some of Hill's initial medical bills, Safeco eventually disputed the causal relationship between the accident and the injuries, refusing to pay any further medical bills after a specific date. Hill sued Bennett for negligence and Safeco for nonpayment of medical expenses, seeking a declaratory judgment that he was entitled to advance payment of medical costs prior to settlement or final judgment and claiming that a declaratory judgment was proper under the Unfair Trade Practices Act and Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997). The District Court granted the declaratory judgment, and Safeco sought a writ of supervisory control because a direct appeal would be an inadequate remedy. The Supreme Court agreed and granted the writ. Safeco's application presented an appropriate legal issue for supervisory control because if the ordered payment of medical expenses was a mistake of law or incorrect, the delay in awaiting the outcome of the corollary litigation could create an unfair prejudice for Safeco, while any unnecessary delay in the payment of the medical costs would certainly prejudice Hill. Ultimately, the Supreme Court affirmed on grounds that the declaratory judgment did not constitute a money judgment for damages in the ordinary sense, but merely removed all uncertainty and controversy over the issue of when the inevitable policy proceeds were due. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834, 57 St. Rep. 604 (2000).

No Liability Per Se for Paying Mandatory Minimum Policy Limits — Avoiding Liability Through Coerced Economic Necessity: Guaranty National Insurance Co. (Guaranty) provided a minimum motor vehicle liability policy for Moore, who was clearly liable for injuring the Watterses in a car accident. Guaranty offered to settle the Watterses' claim to the extent of the policy coverage, but not without an absolute release of all liability. Guaranty argued that without a full release, it would be subject to a bad faith claim by Moore for placing the interests of a third-party claimant above those of its insured to whom it owed a fiduciary duty. The Supreme Court noted that under this section, an insured, but not a third-party claimant, is prohibited from bringing a bad faith action in connection with the handling of a claim. In purchasing the minimum required statutory coverage, Moore could not have reasonably expected that Guaranty would be obligated to provide greater coverage than that purchased by demanding a full liability release as a condition of paying the limits of the minimum coverage. When the monetary consequences of a person's tortious conduct undisputedly exceed policy limits and liability is clear, the only incentive for an injured third-party claimant to settle for policy limits and provide the insured with an absolute release from liability is some form of coerced economic necessity. Compelling an innocent third party to proceed to trial to recoup that which is already owed is inconsistent with public policy to encourage settlement and avoid unnecessary litigation. Guaranty would not have been exposed to per se liability for bad faith from Moore by paying the policy limits. Thus, when liability resulting from an automobile accident is reasonably clear and a third-party claimant's damages undisputedly exceed mandatory minimum policy limits pursuant to 61-6-103, the prompt, fair, and equitable settlement of the claims cannot be forestalled by an insurer based on an illusory bad faith or breach of contract claim that an insured may bring, and to refuse payment based on such an unfounded potential liability is itself a deceptive practice within the meaning of 33-18-201. Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626, 57 St. Rep. 588 (2000), following Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997).

Unfair Trade Practice to Require Full and Final Release of Liability Before Claim Paid Within Policy Limits — "Settlement" Distinguished From "Release": Guaranty National Insurance Co. (Guaranty) provided a minimum motor vehicle liability policy for Moore, who was clearly liable for injuring the Watterses' in a car accident. Guaranty offered to settle the Watterses' claim to the extent of the policy coverage, but not without an absolute release of all liability. The Watterses declined the offer, eventually bringing an unfair trade action against Guaranty for failing to promptly pay damages for which Moore was liable. Guaranty argued that the full release from liability was necessary to effectuate a settlement, citing Thompson v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 161 M 207, 505 P2d 423 (1973), and Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191 (1992), and contended that because no settlement was proffered from the Watterses, Guaranty could not, as a matter of law, have violated 33-18-201. The Supreme Court instead applied Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997). The court clarified the relevant terms, noting that in accord with the general governing principles of contract law from which the law of settlements is derived, in the context of the Unfair Trade Practices Act, a settlement is synonymous with an enforceable bilateral contract that discharges a future or existing obligation, while a release, as a matter of law, is nothing more than an accord and satisfaction or one of several ways in which an obligation may contractually be discharged or settled for less than or for something different than from what is owed. The court concluded that a settlement between Guaranty and the Watterses was legally possible without the Watterses executing a full and final release of all liability, as evidenced by Guaranty's settlement of the Watterses' property damage claims within the limits of Moore's policy without a release. Thus, when liability resulting from an automobile accident is reasonably clear and a third-party claimant's damages undisputedly exceed mandatory minimum policy limits pursuant to 61-6-103, it is an unfair trade practice per se under 33-18-201 for an insurer to condition the payment of the owed mandatory minimum policy limits on the third party's agreement to provide a full and final release of all liability in favor of an insured. An insurer who pays mandatory minimum policy limits under these circumstances does not act in bad faith per se against its insured by not obtaining a full and final liability release on the insured's behalf. Unfortunately for the Watterses, under the case law in effect at the time, Guaranty had a reasonable basis under Juedeman upon which to deny payment of policy limits, so Guaranty's cross-motion for summary judgment was granted. Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626, 57 St. Rep. 588 (2000), overruling Thompson v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 161 M 207, 505 P2d 423 (1973), and Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191 (1992).

Failure to Effectuate Insurance Settlement in Good Faith as Independent Cause of Action: Under 33-18-201, an insurer is required to attempt in good faith to effectuate prompt, fair, and equitable settlements of claims in which liability has become reasonably clear. A violation of this provision gives rise to an independent cause of action under this section. Because the continuing duty of good faith is not ended by commencement of a lawsuit by an insured, that duty can be breached by an insurer's postfiling conduct, including the actions of attorneys conducting the insurer's defense. Amendment of the claim to include an action under this section related back to the original claim and was properly allowed. Further, third-party defendant's alleged failure to conduct a reasonable investigation and its subsequent refusal to pay the claim, although occurring more than 2 years before commencement of plaintiff's cause of action, were, if proved, ostensibly part of the bad faith postjudgment conduct. Thus, the evidence of those acts was not time-barred. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 288, 297 M 33, 991 P2d 915, 56 St. Rep. 1152 (1999), following Safeco Ins. Co. v. Ellinghouse, 223 M 239, 725 P2d 217, 43 St. Rep. 1689 (1986), and Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 261 M 91, 861 P2d 895, 50 St. Rep. 1210 (1993).

Coverage Properly Denied for Insured Who Claimed He Punched Another Person While Unconscious: Smith punched his babysitter in the face but claimed that she had hit him on the head first and that he was unconscious when he struck her. He pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor assault charge and was ordered to pay medical expenses, which he failed to do. The babysitter sued Smith, and he in turn sued his insurance company, which denied coverage on the basis that the policy denied coverage for injuries caused by intentional acts. The Supreme Court held that despite Smith's claim that he was unconscious from a blow to the head when he struck the babysitter, the conduct of striking her with his fist, by its nature, evinced an intent to injure and coverage was properly denied. Smith v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 264 M 129, 870 P2d 74, 51 St. Rep. 186 (1994).

Defense to Charge of Unfair Claim Settlement — Reasonable Basis for Denial of Claim to Be Determined by Trier of Fact: Shortly after the Deans' house was destroyed by fire, they were charged with arson. Their insurance company refused to settle their claim because of the pending arson charges. After the Deans were acquitted of the criminal charges, the insurance company paid them the policy limits. Later, the Deans filed an action in United States District Court alleging a number of violations of 33-18-201. The United States District Court certified a question to the Montana Supreme Court, asking whether the insurance company's refusal to pay the claim while the arson charges were pending constituted a "reasonable basis in law or fact", under this section, as a defense to the action. Citing Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141, 50 St. Rep. 1068 (1993), the Supreme Court held that reasonableness was a question of fact for the trier of fact to decide. Dean v. Austin Mut. Ins. Co., 263 M 386, 869 P2d 256, 51 St. Rep 102 (1994), followed in Debruycker v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 266 M 294, 880 P2d 819, 51 St. Rep. 835 (1994), and distinguished in Watts v. Westland Farm Mut. Ins. Co., 271 M 256, 895 P2d 626, 52 St. Rep. 430 (1995).

Admissibility of Evidence of Insurer's Postfiling Litigation Conduct — Balancing Test: The District Court allowed Palmer to introduce evidence of insurer Farmers Insurance Exchange (Farmers) litigation strategy and tactics that Farmers' attorneys used in defending Palmer's uninsured motorist case and of Farmers' decision to appeal the judgment in that case, raising the question of whether evidence of an insurer's postfiling conduct was admissible in a bad faith action. The Supreme Court held that an insurer's duty to deal fairly and not withhold payment of valid claims does not end when an insured files a complaint against the insurer, but the continuing duty of good faith does not necessarily render evidence of an insurer's postfiling conduct admissible. The court reiterated the balancing test in Rule 403, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), as the correct approach between deterring improper conduct by insurers and allowing insurers to defend themselves against spurious claims. When an insurer's postfiling conduct has some relevance, the trial court must weigh its probative value against the inherently high prejudicial effect of such evidence, keeping in mind the insurer's fundamental right to defend itself. In this case, the prejudicial nature of evidence regarding litigation strategy and tactics and the decision to appeal far outweighed any relevance of the conduct, and the decision to admit the evidence was erroneous. Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 261 M 91, 861 P2d 895, 50 St. Rep. 1210 (1993). See also White v. W. Title Ins. Co., 710 P2d 309 (Cal. 1985), followed in Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 288, 297 M 33, 991 P2d 915, 56 St. Rep. 1152 (1999).

Protection of Work-Product Materials in Bad Faith Insurance Action — Ordinary Work Product Versus Opinion Work Product: The District Court ordered production of all of an insurer's claim files dated after the date that plaintiff's attorney expressed that plaintiff would proceed with a bad faith action for failure to settle a claim. Insurer contended that the order was in error because some of the materials were immune from discovery under the work-product doctrine. Normally, claim files are commenced in anticipation of litigation and an investigation must be geared toward the eventuality of litigation; thus, work-product protection applies from the time a claim file is opened (Kuiper v. District Court, 193 M 452, 632 P2d 694 (1981)). However, in a bad faith case, the investigation is not geared toward ultimate bad faith litigation from the time the file is opened because the insurer would have no reason to anticipate litigation and investigations are not made with the expectation of litigation. Materials consisting of work product prepared in anticipation of litigation have a qualified immunity from discovery under former Rule 26(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), but immunity depends on the type of work product being sought. Ordinary work product that relates to factual matters is discoverable to the extent that it is not privileged and is relevant to the pending action. Opinion work product that relates to mental impressions, opinions, conclusions, or legal theories is provided additional protection because it is necessary to provide a privileged area within which an attorney can analyze and prepare the client's case (U.S. v. Nobles, 422 US 225, 45 L Ed 141, 95 S Ct 2160 (1975)). In a bad faith case in which the issue is whether the insurer had a reasonable basis for denying a claim, the mental impressions and opinions of the insurer are directly at issue. Therefore, a party may discover the opinion work product of the representatives whose mental impressions are at issue only upon a showing of compelling need beyond the substantial need/undue hardship test required by former Rule 26(b). In this case, admission of the opinion work-product materials affected the insurer's right to a fair trial, warranting a remand. Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 261 M 91, 861 P2d 895, 50 St. Rep. 1210 (1993).

Questionable Basis for Denial of Claim — Directed Verdict Inappropriate: Under common law and this section, an insurer cannot be held liable for bad faith in denying a claim if the insurer had a reasonable basis for contesting the claim or the claim amount. As determined in St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Cumiskey, 204 M 350, 665 P2d 223 (1983), an insurer may file a declaratory judgment action to obtain a determination of the validity, continuance, or coverage of the policy, the extent of liability, or the insurer's duty under the policy. However, a directed verdict is not required simply because a reasonable basis may exist to deny coverage. If reasonable people could draw different conclusions about whether an insurer had a reasonable basis for contesting a claim, the issue becomes more than a question of law and a directed verdict is inappropriate. Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 261 M 91, 861 P2d 895, 50 St. Rep. 1210 (1993).

Refusal to Settle Hail Damage Claim — Denial of Claim Without Reasonable Investigation — Jury Question: Dees insured his wheat crop against hail damage with American National Fire Insurance Company. Immediately after a hailstorm caused damage to his fields, Dees telephoned American National, but an adjuster did not arrive until 3 weeks later. After inspecting the fields, American National refused to pay for the damage, claiming that the loss was because of wind and not hail. Both Dees and American National submitted evidence at trial supporting their respective theories on the cause of the damage to the wheat. The District Court refused to grant American National's motion for summary judgment, and the jury found for Dees. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in refusing to grant the insurer's motion for summary judgment and motion for a directed verdict. Summary judgment should not have been granted because there was a genuine issue of material fact as to whether American National had denied Dees's claim without reasonable investigation. Likewise, a directed verdict would have been improper because a directed verdict may be granted only if there is a complete lack of evidence to warrant submission of the case to a jury. Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141, 50 St. Rep. 1068 (1993).

Third-Party Claimant — Determination: The defendant in a personal injury case filed a counterclaim against the plaintiffs, alleging that their negligence was the cause of the automobile accident involving the parties. Subsequently, in his deposition, the defendant admitted that he had been intoxicated at the time of the accident, that he had been driving negligently, and that the plaintiffs had not been negligent. The plaintiffs sought summary judgment to dismiss the defendant's counterclaims, but prior to the hearing, the defendant voluntarily dismissed his counterclaims. The plaintiffs then sought damages from the insurer for bad faith in violation of its statutory duty to settle a claim when liability becomes reasonably clear. On appeal, the defendant's insurance company argued that the plaintiffs had no standing to sue under the unfair trade practices laws because they were not "insureds" or "third-party claimants" as those terms are used in this section. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiffs had alleged that they were injured by the insurer's violation of its duty to settle and therefore were third-party claimants within the meaning of the statute. O'Fallon v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 260 M 233, 859 P2d 1008, 50 St. Rep. 1022 (1993).

Sufficient Evidence to Support Jury Verdict Awarding Punitive Damages for Breach of Fiduciary Duty by Insurer in Dealings With Its Agent: An insured brought an action against Deonier, an insurance agent, and Paul Revere Life Insurance Company (Revere) to recover benefits and damages after the insured's claim was denied on grounds of a preexisting condition, despite the incontestability clause in the policy. The agent cross-claimed against the company for indemnity and breach of fiduciary duty, contending that there was a significant amount of evidence that Revere planned to assert the Forman defense in Montana (see Mass. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Forman, 516 F2d 425 (5th Cir. 1975), in which an insurer asserted a legal defense to the incontestability clause based on its definition of sickness as excluding disabilities that manifested themselves prior to the date of issue of the policy) and that Revere's failure to inform Deonier of its intention to invoke the defense was a clear breach of Revere's duty to inform its agents of a risk of pecuniary loss from potential lawsuits. Revere asserted that pursuant to Doettl v. Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co., 505 F. Supp. 127 (D.C. Mont. 1981), in which a Montana federal District Court endorsed the Forman defense, it had no reason to believe that its policy interpretation might be in violation of Montana law and therefore did not breach its duty to inform its agents of risk of pecuniary loss. Revere argued that punitive damages were inappropriate as a matter of law because it was entitled to assert any defense, including the Forman defense, that had a reasonable basis in the law. Deonier countered by pointing out that she had introduced evidence that by 1994 when Revere first used the Forman defense in Montana, it knew that its selling agents had been sued in at least 20% of the previous lawsuits and the company nevertheless refused to inform its agents of the risk of pecuniary loss if Revere decided to assert that defense. The Supreme Court held that based on the evidence alone, it could conclude that there was a complete absence of any evidence that would justify submitting the issue of punitive damages to the jury and therefore the lower court did not err in denying the motion for judgment as a matter of law on punitive damages. Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2004 MT 297, 323 M 387, 101 P3d 742 (2004).

Insurer Required to Establish Actual Damages — Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage: Plaintiff insurance company sued the defendants for making derogatory comments regarding its leadership and financial condition and alleging violations of the Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA) and interference with prospective economic advantage. The District Court granted summary judgment for the defendants, holding that the UTPA does not create a private right of action by one insurer against another and that the plaintiff had failed to establish damages. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that a business entity must establish actual and quantifiable economic damages and that the plaintiff failed do so with claims of general and reputational damages. Victory Ins. Co. v. Mont. St. Fund, 2015 MT 82, 378 Mont. 388, 344 P.3d 977.

Information Gathering

33-19-201. Pretext interviews prohibited — exception.

Commission Notes

Some states may desire to eliminate the exception in this section and thereby prohibit pretext interviews in all instances. Other states may desire to broaden the exception so that pretext interviews can be utilized in underwriting and rating situations as well as claim situations. States may either expand or limit the prohibition against pretext interviews suggested in this section to accommodate their individual needs and circumstances. Deviation from the standard developed here should not seriously undermine efforts to achieve uniform rules for insurance information practices throughout the various states. [Annotator's Note: Montana's provision differs from the model only in arrangement and by substituting "specific" for "scientific" before "information available for review" in the middle of (2).]

CHAPTER 20
LIFE INSURANCE

Part 1
Policy Provisions

Part Case Notes

First Premium — Acceptance — Creation of Insurance Contract: The acceptance by an insurance company of a first premium on a life insurance policy may have the effect of creating a temporary contract of insurance when the language in the premium receipt or acts by the insurance agent would lead the applicant to believe that the insurance was effective immediately or when there is unequal bargaining power between the applicant and the insurer. Hildebrandt v. Wash. Nat'l Ins. Co., 181 M 231, 593 P2d 37 (1979).

Severability: Section 46, Ch. 531, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 451 at beginning of (2) inserted reference to 33-20-114; and made minor changes in style.

1981 Amendment: Substituted "Parts 1 through 5" for "Parts 1 through 4".

Case Notes

Annuity Contract Considered Investment, Not Life Insurance: Miles invested $30,000 in a tax-deferred variable annuity contract. After Mile's death, the plaintiffs demanded one-half of the annuity investment on grounds that the annuity was life insurance that they were entitled to under Miles' will. The District Court denied their demand, holding that the annuity contract did not constitute insurance under Montana law. On appeal, the heirs cited In re Fligman's Estate, 113 M 505, 129 P2d 627 (1942), for the proposition that because annuity contracts were considered insurance for inheritance tax purposes in that case, it followed that annuity contracts have to be considered insurance for all purposes. The Supreme Court held that because the annuity contract in Miles' case did not involve indemnification, loss, damage, liability, or contingent events, it was an investment, not insurance, and the District Court did not err in so holding. In re Estate of Miles v. Miles, 2000 MT 41, 298 M 312, 994 P2d 1139, 57 St. Rep. 191 (2000).

1987 Amendment: At end of (1) deleted reference to 33-20-109 and inserted reference to 33-20-131.

33-20-104. Grace period.

Case Notes

Premium Payment Condition — Time of Essence of Contract: The condition in a policy of life insurance that the policy shall cease if the stipulated premium shall not be paid on or before the day fixed was of the very essence and substance of the contract, against which even a court of equity could not grant relief. Conlon v. N. Life Ins. Co., 108 M 473, 92 P2d 284 (1939).

33-20-105. Incontestability.

Compiler's Comments

2005 Amendment: Chapter 469 substituted (2)(a) and (2)(b) concerning life insurance coverage issued as result of an exchange or conversion for former (2) that read: "(2) A policy issued in connection with an exchange or a conversion is incontestable from the time of issue"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2005.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 380 inserted (2) providing that policy issued in connection with exchange or conversion is incontestable from time of issue; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

33-20-106. Entire contract.

Case Notes

Warranty: A "warranty" in a life insurance policy must be part and parcel of the contract, made so by express agreement of the parties upon the face thereof, and where a warranty is found to have been violated, it is unnecessary to determine the legal effect of an alleged fraudulent representation. Schroeder v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 103 M 547, 63 P2d 1016 (1936).

33-20-112. Reinstatement.

Compiler's Comments

33-20-114. Payment of claims — interest.

Severability: Section 36, Ch. 63, L. 2015, was a severability clause.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 380 in (2) at end of second sentence after "death" inserted reference to rate stated in policy, whichever is greater, and in third sentence after "insurer" deleted "after October 1, 1985"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1985 Amendment: In (1), at beginning substituted "There shall be a provision, which may be made by endorsement, that when a claim is made upon the death" for "There shall be a provision that when a policy shall become a claim by the death" and at end deleted last sentence that read: "If an insurer shall specify a particular period prior to the expiration of which settlement shall be made, such period shall not exceed 2 months from the receipt of such proofs"; and inserted (2) requiring payment of interest.

Case Notes

Death by Pulmonary Aspiration as Accidental Within Context of Insurance Policy: The physician who examined Caster after he died testified that Caster had aspirated food, causing respiratory arrest and then cardiac arrest, which the physician characterized as accidental based on the absence of heart problems in Caster's medical history. Caster's insurance policy provided for payment of a benefit for loss of life due to an injury, which was defined as bodily injury caused solely by an accident. However, a definition of accident was not included in the policy. The trial court adopted the definition from 46 C.J.S. Insurance 863 (1993), finding that the common understanding of the term "contemplates something unanticipated, unforeseen, and unusual, without design, intention, or premeditation". Jefferson National Life Insurance Company contended that coverage did not extend to Caster because his death was not caused solely by accident, but produced no evidence that Caster's death was anything but unanticipated, unforeseen, and unusual, without design, intention, or premeditation. The estate met its burden of proving that Caster's death by aspiration was an accidental death covered by the policy. Ike v. Jefferson Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 267 M 396, 884 P2d 471, 51 St. Rep. 1097 (1994), distinguishing Brothers v. Gen. Motors Corp., 202 M 477, 658 P2d 1108 (1983).

Intoxication Exclusion Inapplicable Absent Evidence of Influence Upon Death: Caster's life insurance policy excluded coverage if death was caused in whole or in part, directly or indirectly, from the influence of any intoxicant. Evidence was submitted that Caster had been drinking the night before he died, but the physician who examined Caster after he died testified that Caster had aspirated food, causing respiratory arrest and then cardiac arrest. The insurance company bore the burden of proving that the exclusionary clause applied, but because of a lack of substantial credible evidence that the influence of alcohol had any relationship to Caster's death, the trial court properly held that the intoxication exclusion in the policy did not apply to Caster's accidental death. Ike v. Jefferson Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 267 M 396, 884 P2d 471, 51 St. Rep. 1097 (1994).

Death Resulting From Fall Caused by Loss of Consciousness — Accidental Death: Insured had coverage for injuries, including death, resulting directly, and independently of all other causes, from an accident and not resulting from disease. He had a history of losing consciousness caused by years of overindulgence in alcohol. This would not in itself have caused death, but he lost consciousness, fell, hit his head on a sidewalk, and died. The injury and death were accidental under the policy and were caused by his head hitting the sidewalk, not by his propensity to lose consciousness. Coverage under the policy was required. Pond v. N. Am. Life & Cas. Co., 215 M 428, 697 P2d 1360, 42 St. Rep. 515 (1985).

"Good Health" Clause — Coverage Not Precluded: "Good health" clause in application for life policy did not preclude recovery where insured suffered undiagnosed terminal cancer at the time of application and thus was unaware of illness. Friez v. Nat'l Old Line Ins. Co., 703 F2d 1093 (9th Cir. 1983).

Suicide — Question of Fact: Where insured did not make statements or take prior actions indicating his intent to commit suicide but there was no benign explanation for his handling of the gun, proper approach under Montana law was to allow jury as fact finder to decide whether insured intentionally killed himself and thus whether insurers were liable on two life insurance policies. Sankovich v. Life Ins. Co. of N. Am., 638 F2d 136 (9th Cir. 1981).

Death Certificate Binding Beneficiary: Where attending physician recited in death certificate that he treated insured some 6 weeks before date of policy and cause of death was heart disease and acute bronchitis and beneficiary adopted the certificate in making proof of death, the certificate makes out a prima facie case of the truth of the statements and is sufficient evidence to establish breach of warranty. Schroeder v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 103 M 547, 63 P2d 1016 (1936).

Saving Clause: Section 40, Ch. 490, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 451 near end of (2), before "with adjustment", inserted "or by any other method more favorable to the policyholder"; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendment: In (1)(b)(v) inserted second sentence allowing continued dependent coverage upon payment of the premium for a dependent rider; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Provisions of Insurance Statutes to Be Read Into Policy — Arguably Nonconforming Suicide Payment Provision Not Voided: An insurance policy contained a suicide exclusion (see 1997 amendment) permitted by this section, but the payment provided to the beneficiary arguably did not comply with subsection (2) of this section. The beneficiary contended that a proper application of 33-15-315 to the policy resulted in invalidating the entirety of the suicide exclusion. The District Court determined that 33-15-315 required that the Insurance Commissioner's reserve value provision of subsection (2) of this section be read into the policy. The plain meaning of 33-15-315 is to give effect to insurance policies and provisions to the fullest extent possible by reading statutory provisions into the policy to achieve full compliance with the insurance code. Nothing in 33-15-315 supports applying it to invalidate policy provisions. The suicide exclusion contemplated some payment to the beneficiary in an amount much reduced from the total benefit amount. The arguably nonconforming payment provision did not render any portion of the policy invalid. Instead, the subsection (2) provision of this section was included in the policy so as to bring the entirety of the exclusion and the policy itself into compliance with the code. In light of the fact that the amount tendered to the beneficiary exceeded the amount required by utilizing the methodology contained in subsection (2) of this section, the District Court did not err in concluding that the subsection must be read into the policy to effectuate the provisions clearly contemplated by the parties. Sagan v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 259 M 506, 857 P2d 719, 50 St. Rep. 902 (1993).

Car Rental Accidental Death Policy as Disability Insurance: An insurance policy providing a renter of a car with coverage for accidental death arising from operation during the rental period was classified as disability insurance under 33-1-207, rather than life insurance under 33-1-208. Therefore, an "intoxicants exclusion" in the policy was not voided by the prohibition against such exclusions as related to life insurance policies under this section. Rodli v. Am. Bankers Ins. Co. of Fla., 44 St. Rep. 1888 (D.C. Mont. 1987) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to HB 592 (Ch. 498, L. 1983) provided: "A Statement of Intent is required for this bill in that it delegates rulemaking authority to the Commissioner of Insurance in Sections 6 and 7 [33-20-208 and 33-20-209].

Although 33-1-313, MCA, delegates to the Commissioner of Insurance rulemaking authority to effectuate any provisions of the Code, as this bill substantially increases this power, a Statement of Intent is required.

Section 6(8)(g) [33-20-208(8)(g)] empowers the Commissioner of Insurance to approve by regulation new mortality tables.

Section 7 [33-20-209] allows the Commissioner of Insurance to promulgate regulations pertaining to those plans of life insurance not included in the original Nonforfeiture Law. Such regulations would define minimum cash values and other nonforfeiture values."
